TAMIFLU 'VITAL FOR CHILDREN'

By JENNA PUDELEK

YOUNGSTERS with severe swine flu who do not take Tamiflu could face serious complications and even death, a leading family doctor has warned parents.

The antiviral medicine has been mired in controversy after two studies found more than half of children who took the drug suffered side effects such as nausea and nightmares.

Another study published in the British Medical Journal (BMJ) suggested antiviral medication does not prevent complications, such as pneumonia and severe asthma, in children with flu.

But Dr Caroline Jessel, deputy medical director at NHS West Kent, urged parents to continue giving Tamiflu and other antivirals to their children if they are prescribed.

"If the child was quite unwell and I was a parent, then the risk of taking them is less than the risk of not taking Tamiflu and getting really ill with swine flu," she said.

"You have to weigh up the risks and benefits. Parents are not obliged, but if it is advised I would certainly think about it because they might be life saving in some situations."

In response to the BMJ study, the Department of Health (DoH) said the study was based on seasonal flu and so may not apply to swine flu.

The two studies by the Health Protection

Antiviral drugs may stop your children dying, warns doctor

Agency were carried out in the containment stage of the pandemic when everyone sharing a classroom with a child who had the H1N1 virus was given Tamiflu, even if they showed no symptoms, in a bid to stop its spread.

In a study of 103 pupils at three London schools, 53 per cent suffered side effects including nausea, stomach pain and problems sleeping.

Asked if there was a danger in parents not giving their children antivirals due to fears over side effects, Dr Jessel said: "I think it would not be sensible to withhold it, particularly where they are severely affected. Some of the complications may well be prevented and the complications may be more severe and longer in duration [if Tamiflu is not taken].

"For friends and family it is less infectious so there are definitely benefits. As with all medication, it is not of total benefit without risks.

"It is the same situation with antibiotics."

She said the number of patients being prescribed Tamiflu had fallen significantly in recent weeks due to the summer holidays and people spending more time outdoors. But the virus has not disappeared, she warned.

NHS Eastern and Coastal Kent also said the number of people with swine flu-like symptoms in its area had also decreased over the past week.

"The research has thrown a different perspective on Tamiflu and helped us to understand its impact better," Dr Jessel added.

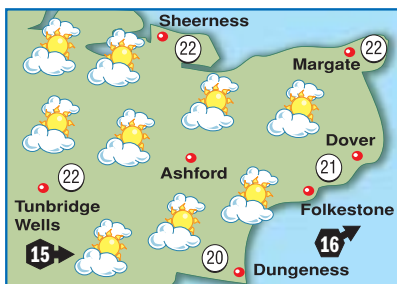

"It is not really relevant in a flu pandemic because it is based on seasonal flu. It is interesting, but not necessarily going to change the advice. More research is needed, but our advice is still relatively straight forward - if symptoms are quite severe, obviously they need help and it is effective in reducing the duration and symptoms of the swine flu.

'We need urgent drug trial for children'

"For very mild cases it has always been the case not to give antivirals. Some people can be treated perfectly well with over-the-counter medication."

Matthew Thompson, author of the BMJ study, told New Scientist: "It may be worth the DoH taking the new research on board and perhaps having a more targeted approach to the use of antivirals. Or urgently conducting randomised controlled trials of children and adults to identify whether there are sub-groups of children who will benefit from antivirals and whether they do have an impact on severe complications such as pneumonia or hospitalisation."

In Canada and the US antivirals are only recommended for patients at particularly high risk or with severe illness, he said.

Reports say in Japan GPs have been advised not to give the drugs to those aged between 10-19 because of high rates of 'neuropsychiatric side effects' such as nightmares and feeling confused.

HEALTHY children and babies under six-months-old will not be among those given the vaccine against swine flu, the Government has announced.

A mass immunisation campaign, which will see more than 11 million people in four priority groups mainly focused on those whose underlying health conditions put them at risk from the pandemic, will begin in October.

First children and people under 65 with conditions such as heart disease, diabetes and asthma, then all pregnant women, people who live with patients with compromised immune systems such as those with leukaemia, and then people over 65 with underlying health conditions.

Around two million frontline health and social care workers will also be given the vaccine. The DoH said preparations were being made to extend the programme.

Children have not been included in the first wave of vaccinations because although they are disproportionately affected by the virus, the vast majority make a full recovery, the DoH said.

County Hall leader's gunning for quangos

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

KENT County Council leader Paul Carter has thrown his weight behind proposals to drastically reduce the number of quangos in the UK.

Tory leader David Cameron said last month there were too many Government-funded organisations like Ofcom and the Learning and Skills Council, run by people who are un-elected and therefore unaccountable for the big decisions they are entrusted to make.

He pledged to cut back on the number of quangos (quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations) to save money if his party wins the next general election.

While Mr Cameron would not be drawn on just how much cash could be saved, other Tories like Cllr Carter have been more forthcoming with the figures.

The KCC chief believes £5 billion could be saved in the South East alone.

He told Kent on Sunday: "I think a Conservative government could make huge savings by getting rid of a significant number of regional quangos and giving their responsibilities back to local government."

"I think part of the reason there are so many of them is due to a lack of trust from central government towards local government, but I think local government has transformed itself over the last 20 years and is now more effective throughout the country than any agency.

Carter: 'We could save £5 billion'

"KCC is one of the most effective local authorities and is at the forefront of better trust and better understanding."

Among the quangos Cllr Carter believes need to be scrapped or reformed are the Learning and Skills Council, the Homes and Communities Agency and the various Regional Development Agencies.

He has already canvassed support from county leaders in England's eight other regions and intends to publish detailed plans for the party conferences in October.

Efficiency

Cllr Carter said: "We need to work out how exactly the quangos could be broken up to further empower local government."

"I think KCC in particular can run things more efficiently and spend Government money much more wisely, working very closely with the 12 district councils."

"We know the problems in the local economy much better than an unelected representative sitting in an office in Guildford."

Cllr Carter's comments are a thinly-veiled swipe at the South East England Development Agency (Seeda), which is based in Guildford, Surrey, yet is responsible for the economic and social development of an area that is bigger than Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland combined.

Last month South East minister Jonathan Shaw spoke out in defence of the group at a meeting of the Commons' South East Committee.

He pointed to the Channel Tunnel Rail Link as an example of the type of investment Seeda has helped make possible.

When informed of Cllr Carter's comments, a Seeda spokesman said it delivered an average of £5.60 for every pound spent between 2002 and 2007.

He added: "With Seeda support, Kent has received significant investment in regeneration and job creation."

"Seeda has helped Kent make the case for becoming a regional priority, attracting more investment than the area would have received if investment decisions were based on population or an equal allocation across local authority areas."

"Seeda investment into the region has included a contribution of £60m to leverage £700m of private sector funding to develop Chatham Maritime."

"This has helped create 3,500 new jobs and bring three universities together on a new campus for 6,000 students."

"Other investments include an £8m contribution to support urban regeneration in Margate, and more than £7.5m to support redevelopment of Dover's St James area."

You'll like this, not a little but a lot, as Paul Daniels visits Magic at village hall

By CHRIS MURPHY
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

PAUL Daniels, one of Britain's most famous magicians, is coming to Kent to perform in a village hall in front of a lucky audience of just 300 people.

Several years ago, he decided he wanted to give something back to the people who helped make him a global star.

He told Kent on Sunday: "I just love doing these shows. It allows me to get really close to my audiences, and they seem to enjoy it too."

Daniels will be appearing at Boughton Village Hall, about 10 minutes outside Faversham. Its website describes the venue as "a large hall set overlooking playing fields and orchards and adjacent to the village school", and facilities include a modest bar, kitchen, cloakroom and toilets and parking for 60 cars.

From his home Paul, 71, said: "This is exactly the sort of venue I am enjoying so much these days."

When world-famous celebrities are not playing there, the hall is used for meetings, parties, weddings, drama, off-road model car racing, concerts, conferences, bowls, billiards and a range of village organisations – all at very reasonable rates.

Daniels said: "I got involved in this kind of thing four or five years ago when my own village asked me to do a show there."

"These are the easiest things on the planet to do, because everyone knows everyone, they are friendly and for some reason they don't get celebrities in the villages any more."

"They have to go and see concerts where they never get close. Talking to that first audience after the show, they were saying how great it was.

"They told me they don't go to the theatres in the towns any more, because at night time they are frightened because of all the bingeing. So I realised if I put on these small shows, they don't have to pay congestion charges, parking... making this a really good night out for them.

"I made a few inquiries and now I am doing 10 or 12 of these small shows a year and am loving it.

"I earn enough from some of the other jobs I do and I just love meeting people.

"I get to know some of the people in the audience, too. I open up by asking them if they want to ask me anything, and I get questions on all sorts of subjects.

"They ask about me, television, working in theatres, the business, and Debbie's phone number, which I tell them they can't have. But then they get on to things like politics, religion and more."

The honorary vice-president of the Medway Magicians, added: "I will be doing this for the foreseeable future, I am enjoying it too much. I drew a circle around my house marking out two hours' drive.

"Another good thing about going to these small places is that I am off the motorway for a lot of the time, which means I see fabulous countryside and some lovely places.

"These are the sorts of things you don't see when you are in my business."

He said he once finished a major show in Las Vegas, got on a jet back to the UK, and just a few hours later was performing in a village hall in Teeside.

"It was amazing, and this is the reason I am doing it – because I am having such a great time. It is a great way for me to run my life."

The show is on October 9 at 7.30pm. Tickets are £12.50 for adults and £10 concessions. To book, phone Linda on 01227 751225, or go to Bull Lane Garage, Bull Lane, or either the Post Office or Village Store both in The Street. You can also visit www.starsaroundtown.co.uk.

Turbines stopped

SEVEN turbines at the £60 million wind farm on the Romney Marsh have stopped working only a month after it was opened.

RWE Npower Renewables, which runs the site at Little Cheyne Court, said technical problems with the transformers, which are associated with the high voltage circuit, meant they had to be sent back to Belgium.

The remaining 19 turbines are still operating at the farm, which Energy Secretary Ed Miliband opened in July.

A RWE spokeswoman said all the turbines should be fully operational by mid-October.

Sea jumps halted

POLICE have enforced a dispersal order to stop young people jumping into the sea from the harbour walls of a seaside town.

The order, which came into force on Friday, comes after complaints from trawlermen and the harbour authority in Folkestone.

Acting Sergeant John Weller, from the Shepway Neighbourhood Policing Unit said jumping from the harbour wall was not a criminal offence but a civil one, which the order that runs until October 2 would tackle.

Race case teacher 'used daughter's ID in police check'

A TEACHER seeking £1.2 million compensation for racial discrimination has been accused of using her daughter's fingerprints for a criminal record check.

Samantha Burmis, 41, a former maths teacher at Aylesford School, admitted at a tribunal in Ashford this week that she failed to declare her criminal history.

According to a national newspaper, Mrs Burmis admitted she ticked the "no" box on her Criminal Records Bureau check form for the question that asks if the applicant has any criminal convictions.

But the CRB revealed she has convictions for dishonesty relating to mortgage fraud – which she claimed had nothing to do with her.

Mrs Burmis, from Gravesend, is now being investigated by police for using her daughter's fingerprints on her CRB check after it was revealed the 19-year-old's prints were already on police file.

The Daily Telegraph reported that Mrs Burmis' daughter Nina currently holds a police record for using a forged cheque.

When Mrs Burmis finally admitted her discrepancy to the hearing, she said: "Okay, I gave incorrect information.

"It's just ticking a box. I didn't actually write anything."

The unemployed maths teacher took the Aylesford School, near Maidstone, to an employment tribunal for unfair dismissal after she was sacked for gross misconduct amid claims she smoked cannabis on a school trip.

Mrs Burmis won her case of racial discrimination against her former employer, Kent County Council, in 2007, after it was reported a senior teacher referred to her as "dark meat".

She is now seeking a £1.2 million payout on the grounds the accusations destroyed her career and have left her unable to find another post.

But it was revealed at the tribunal on Wednesday that Mrs Burmis is currently on police bail for a number of offences, such as fraud, false representation and perjury.

Peter Kirby, representing KCC, told the tribunal: "Mrs Burmis repeatedly failed to declare her criminal convictions on school application forms, or engage properly with the CRB process.

"She is now being investigated by the police for getting her daughter to give her fingerprints instead."

The four-day hearing was due to finish on Friday, but the tribunal had yet to issue its ruling as Kent on Sunday went to press.

RONNIE Biggs' release from custody has given him a new zest for life, according to the biographer of the seriously ill Great Train Robber.

The 79-year-old was given only days to live when he was struck down with severe pneumonia late last month, but doctors say there is now a slim chance he could survive to see Christmas.

Medway resident Mike Gray – author of Ronnie Biggs: The Inside Story – is one of only a handful of people who has been invited to visit the infamous criminal in hospital.

He told Kent on Sunday: "I do not blame Ronnie for feeling anger and rejection against the Government and certain daily newspapers.

"He echoed to me what he told his son Michael – that he will find the inner strength to celebrate Michael's 35th birthday this weekend and possibly make it until Christmas.

"The hospital visit ended as it had started – very emotional with tears streaming down Ronnie's cheeks.

"The man still has fight left in him and I for one am so pleased he hasn't given up. He's staying strong and is clutching onto his dignity.

"The Brazilian hug and double-cheeked kiss was a strong message that he had never given up the fight, and neither had we."

Compassionate

Biggs is the best-known member of a 15-strong gang that attacked the Glasgow to London mail train in August, 1963, making off with £2.6 million in what at the time was the largest robbery in British history.

He was sentenced to 30 years in prison, but escaped after 15 months and went on the run in Spain, Australia and Brazil.

Biggs gave himself up in 2001, and has served the last eight years behind bars, despite repeated pleas to release him on compassionate grounds due to his rapidly deteriorating health.

Justice Secretary Jack Straw finally gave in last week, meaning Mr Gray's visit to Norfolk hospital was the first time he had been allowed to see Biggs without an armed guard.

He said: "Ronnie's pneumonia is still life-threatening. He cannot move due to his fractured hip, he has a bag fitted for toilet purposes and he cannot wash or shave.

"He cannot speak, gets tired very easily and sleeps for 20 hours a day. The list is endless.

"But Ronnie's side ward in the hospital is covered wall-to-wall in cards, letters, flowers and gifts – a true testament to his popularity.

"He's an old man who has never hurt anyone in his life. Ronnie was being slowly crucified on the Home Office cross but, thank God, he has now been removed from it. Common sense has prevailed."

Out-spoken Tory hits out at NHS on US television – again

KENT MEP Daniel Hannan has been criticised by his Conservative colleagues for again attacking the NHS on American television, writes Steve Knight.

Giving his views on President Barack Obama's planned health reforms, Mr Hannan told the right-wing Fox News programme he wouldn't wish the service on anyone.

It was the second time the outspoken Tory had appeared on the show, having earlier this year described the NHS as a "mistake" that has "made people iller" over the course of its 60-year history.

Shadow health secretary Andrew Lansley said neither he nor Conservative leader David Cameron agreed with Mr Hannan's views.

He said: "What he said was both a negative view of the NHS, but more to the point was a distorted view of the NHS.

"I think it's very important for people in America to understand the NHS has very powerful examples that they can look to.

"In this country we have a degree of equity of access to healthcare which many in America envy.

"What we need in this country, which I think Americans are very keen to retain in their healthcare system, is the ability of patients to exercise more control over their own healthcare and to make decisions about their healthcare."

Mr Hannan, who lives in Winchester, Hampshire, was first elected to the European Parliament in 1999. He is a fierce Eurosceptic and serves on both the Committee on Fisheries and the Delegation for Relations with Afghanistan.

Writing in his Daily Telegraph blog on Wednesday, Mr Hannan said: "I am not the Conservative Party's healthcare spokesman. I'm fond of Andrew Lansley and I strongly support David Cameron as party leader.

"On this issue, though, I disagree with both of them.

"Any suggestion the NHS might be improved upon is shouted down as an attack on the people in it, which is precisely the point I was making about how hard it is to reform so large a bureaucracy."

Pair arrested after hoax 'missing girl' call lead to search

TWO people arrested after a hoax call sparked a huge manhunt for a 'missing girl' have been released on police bail.

The 33-year-old man and 47-year-old woman, both from Rochester, were arrested after a caller to police on Thursday afternoon claimed a young girl – thought to be six years old – fell into the River Medway, near Sun Pier, Chatham.

Emergency services including the Thames Coastguard and a search helicopter were scrambled and spent more than an hour and a half scouring the riverside. Following an extensive search, no child was found.

The couple were arrested on suspicion of wasting police time. They are due back at Medway Police Station on September 24

FOOD SECURITY: A consultation has been launched to improve the way food is grown, and scientists at East Malling Research showed minister Hilary Benn some of their work

Science will fill our fridges

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

SCIENTISTS have spoken of the major role they play in ensuring the UK's food supply remains secure in the future.

This week the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs launched a consultation and is asking producers, supermarkets and consumers to contribute.

Between 60 and 65 per cent of food consumed in the UK is also produced in the country, and the horticultural scientists at East Malling Research (EMR) are among those working hard to ensure the trend continues in the years to come.

Chief executive Dr Mike Solomon described food security as a "key global issue".

He said: "The resources on which we depend are finite and we need a more high-tech approach to some production systems because there will be fewer chemicals available in the future to kill pests and the like.

"A lot of our research is aimed at finding solutions for that problem.

"There are several motors driving us, one of which is that in future years we will be producing less meat because of the relatively efficient production of plant-based food.

"That's appealing to the UK because there is an increasing appreciation for the benefits of a healthy diet.

"Climate change is also having an impact on the types of crops we will be able to grow, but we've been pretty nimble in adapting our technologies to suit that.

"I also think the UK is becoming more aware of the way the world is changing and can see the benefits of becoming self-sufficient."

In launching the consultation this week, Environment Secretary Hilary Benn said people needed to start thinking ahead about how to produce more food using less water and less fertiliser.

EMR is again leading the way in this area, having recently discovered a way to reduce the amount of water needed to grow a tonne of strawberries from 70 tonnes to just 10, while also improving taste and increasing the levels of antioxidants and vitamin C present.

The work has major implications, not just for UK growers but also fruit and vegetable producers in Spain, southern Europe and China.

Dr Solomon said: "This type of development is clearly pretty crucial when we are trying to grow crops in a world where the amount of available water is decreasing, or we need it for other uses. The work is now being extended into all sorts of other crops, while we are also developing new plant types that will need less water."

The food security consultation has also sparked a debate about the use of 'best before' labels that are being blamed for the 364,000 tons of edible food that goes to waste in the UK every year.

Mr Benn has suggested removing the labels to cut down on the amount being binned, and EMR storage specialist David Johnson agreed.

He said: "During our research into the labelling and storage of fresh produce, we found that the time interval between 'sell by' and 'best before' date labels were often standardised across the range of fruit and vegetables – irrespective of the degree of perishability of particular products.

"It will save a great deal of misunderstanding and waste if consumers use their own judgement about whether their fruit and vegetables are OK to use and eat."

Rovers return for Gills

Club to cash in on cup tie with Premiership side

GILLINGHAM FC are in line for another bumper payday after drawing Premiership side Blackburn Rovers in the second round of the Carling Cup, writes Steve Knight.

Kent's only Football League club received several unbudgeted cash boosts last season and will expect the same again when the former Premiership champions visit the Priestfield Stadium later this month.

Extra income will come Gillingham's way thanks to a packed house of at least 10,000 on Tuesday, August 25, while Sky Sports could also pay to screen the game live.

Manager Mark Stimson told KOS Media this week: "It's a fantastic draw. I said after the game the other night [against Plymouth Argyle in round one] that any big club would be great for the finances, and that's certainly what Blackburn are.

Experience

"It was only a few years ago that I was at the Millennium Stadium watching them actually win the trophy, so it's a great draw and I look forward to it.

"Sam Allardyce is a fantastic manager with a fantastic team so it will be a good experience for myself and the players.

"Blackburn will be expecting to win the game, but we might just surprise them."

The first of several cash injections last season came when Gillingham drew another Premiership side, Aston Villa, at home in the third round of the FA Cup – a game that was screened live on ITV1.

It earned the club a pay day in the region of

ACID TEST: Simeon Jackson gets another chance to take on Premiership opposition £300,000, with a similar amount received following the Gills' successful play-off campaign that culminated in a 1-0 win over Shrewsbury Town at Wembley.

England goalkeeper Paul Robinson is among Blackburn's collection of stars, along with Australia international Brett Emerton and South African striker Benni McCarthy.

Former Gillingham keeper Jason Brown is also a member of the Blackburn squad, but has made only a handful of first-team appearances in three years at the club.

Long-time Gills supporter Alan Liptrott, co-editor of fansite GillsConnect.com, told Kent on Sunday it was about time some of the money was spent on new players.

He said: "I think the fans are looking for some injection of new blood into the club and a lot would definitely like to see another forward in the side because it looks like sooner or later Simeon Jackson will go.

"We all thought the big-money games would mean we'd have some cash to spend, but unfortunately it hasn't turned out quite like that. I think you can even tell in Stimson's voice that he would like some, too."

The last time Gillingham faced a Premiership side in the Carling Cup was in September, 2005, when they beat Portsmouth 3-2 after extra time in the third round.

Blackburn beat Tottenham Hotspur 2-1 to win the trophy in 2002, which marked their first major honour since winning the Premiership title seven years earlier.

Mr Liptrott said he expected a capacity crowd at Priestfield for the clash.

He added: "When we are the underdogs we tend to pull a few rabbits out of the hat, as we showed last season when we were very unlucky to lose to Villa.

"With a large crowd under the floodlights and all the excitement of the cup, I think we could well put on a good show."

The Gills have enjoyed a flying start to the current League One campaign, thrashing arch-rivals Swindon Town 5-0 last weekend, with star striker Jackson scoring a hat-trick.

Scouts from a number of big clubs watched him add to his tally on Tuesday night when the team pulled off a shock 2-1 victory over Championship side Plymouth Argyle in the cup.

Ambulance makes Asian charity dash

A RETIRED ambulance and an old school minibus from Kent have been driven across Europe and Asia to be donated to a charity in Mongolia.

St John Ambulance Kent was about to scrap the 15-year-old Renault Crusader when a group of fundraisers approached the charity and asked if they could drive it to the capital of the central Asian country Ulaan Baatar.

The team, NAG (New Ash Green) Mongols was made up of three men and three women, who were taking part in the three-week rally for the first time.

Paul Endean, the NAG's team leader, said: "The generosity of St John Ambulance Kent in donating the vehicle will be received gratefully from the communities in Mongolia."

It has not been decided which charity in Mongolia will get the vehicles. Money is also being collected for the Kent Air Ambulance Trust, Ellenor Lions Hospice, Save the Children and The Children's Development Protection Fund.

While acknowledging hard times ahead for communities, County Hall chief warns...

'We need positive thinking'

COUNTY Hall's most senior official has said a "magic bullet" from the public sector would not solve the social problems brought on by the recession, writes Jenna Pudelek.

Peter Gilroy, the chief executive of Kent County Council, was responding to a report by the Audit Commission, which found local authorities were not doing enough to prepare communities for the effects of the economic downturn.

"Councils should be prepared for worsening [social problems]," he said. "But the first thing to say about all of this is part of the danger is that we nationally drive ourselves into a self-fulfilling prophecy of doom and gloom everywhere."

"I'm not saying the Audit Commission is not partially correct, but overall if you keep saying something bad will happen, in the end it will. We have a responsibility to get the language a bit more upbeat."

The commission's report said councils should be planning for the social problems brought on by unemployment, such as addiction, alcoholism and domestic violence.

It said councils were facing the "second wave" of the downturn as the effects of rising business failures, bankruptcies and unemployment bite at communities.

"I think we can overplay that," Mr Gilroy said. "It is true risks will happen, but major social problems are not inevitable."

Action to tackle the problems of the downturn

MEDWAY Council has seen an increase in the number of people claiming benefits and free school meals as the recession has begun to bite.

In response to the Audit Commission's report that local authorities are not doing enough to support their communities through the downturn, the council said it is set to launch a number of initiatives in the coming weeks.

Robin Cooper, the council's director of regeneration, community and culture, said: "We get regular updates on our income levels and statistics so we know what ways things are happening."

"Unemployment is up of course, it is about 4.5 per cent here at the moment, that was the figure a month ago, so it has probably gone up again."

The council is setting up a Job Shop in Chatham High Street next week. Mr Cooper said it would include all the services people need to help them back into the workplace. It will also offer interview and CV tips, as well as advice about training for school leavers.

"We have just put forward a package with colleagues in Gravesend, Swale and Dartford, for 450 apprenticeships over the next few months, working not just here in the council but across the public and private sector."

The commission's report highlights the social problems expected as a result of the recession, such as higher crime levels and issues with addiction and alcoholism.

Mr Cooper said the council was working with the police and primary care trust, NHS Medway, to monitor the situation.

"These are big issues and we have to get communities more engaged at helping themselves and not believing there is a magic bullet from the public sector that is going to solve these problems."

Active

He said KCC had taken what the commission called a "more ambitious and active" approach to recession.

"As far as Kent is concerned, the political administration could see we were going into an extraordinary period and accepted that more people would be unemployed and the difficulties that then spin off that."

"One of the things we've done is given another £250,000 to the Citizens Advice Bureau because we could see the demand was increasing.

"We have gateway services trying to offer services and help make sure people can go to a one-stop shop for advice."

"Kent Trading Standards and police are cracking down on loan sharks who target vulnerable people with sky-high interest rates. We have set up a credit union for the whole of Kent to offer affordable loans and savings with another £250,000 on that, which will launch before October."

He said the authority was working with the Energy Saving Trust so residents could save up £340 a year on bills.

"Kent is one of those ambitious places," he added. "We have gone the extra mile bringing forward ideas and getting youngsters into apprenticeships and supporting business in different ways so people can stay at work rather than put them on the unemployment register."

KCC has opened 'gateway centres' in most of the county's main retail centres and also provides 'mobile gateways' to rural communities. They offer free internet access, daily surgeries by agencies such as Connexions and community health as well as advice on council tax, benefits, planning, housing, social care and adult education.

More information about getting through the tough economic times is at the authority's Backing Kent People site www.kent.gov.uk/people or by calling 08458 247247.

Doctor admits more may die from outbreak

By JENNA PUDELEK

jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

THE HEAD of the Health Protection Unit has not ruled out more deaths from an outbreak of legionnaires' disease.

Five cases of the infection have been confirmed and one patient, who was admitted to the Kent and Canterbury Hospital already ill from Legionella bacteria, died last Saturday.

Dr Mathi Chandrakumar director of the Kent Health Protection Unit (HPU), which is investigating the outbreak, said it was difficult to say at this stage whether more people with the respiratory disease would die.

He said: "They are all elderly people and suffer from a number of other conditions, so they are frail as well."

East Kent Hospitals University NHS Foundation Trust said two or three people are believed to have been infected by bacteria from a showerhead at the William Harvey Hospital in Ashford.

The others are believed to have picked up the infection at home or in the community.

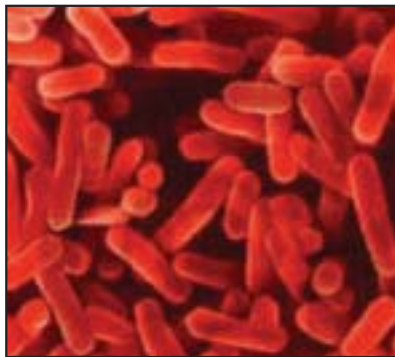

Two elderly female patients are seriously ill but stable, and the other two patients are responding to treatment, the trust said.

In a letter to all staff the trust's medical director, Dr Neil Martin, said the trust anticipated there may be other people developing the infection, who have either become infected in hospital or in the community.

"A further complication is that initial symptoms are similar to those of swine flu," Dr Martin said. "Because of this, there is a possibility that once swine flu has been diagnosed... other problems may be overlooked."

Staff have been asked to be extra vigilant when diagnosing, treating or caring for people, particularly vulnerable groups such as those with underlying clinical problems.

Dr Martin said if patients do not respond to antivirals, further tests should be carried out. He added: "We need to be extra cautious over the next few weeks as we may see further patients who may have caught the infection at the William Harvey before the problem was recognised."

AT RISK: The people who have been infected with legionnaires' disease all have underlying health problems

The incubation period for Legionella can be up to 14 days and symptoms include a flu-like illness such as muscle aches, dry cough, fever, tiredness and sometimes diarrhoea.

Legionnaires' disease is a rare form of pneumonia caused by a type of bacteria that is found in the environment.

It causes disease when it is spread through the air as a spray or vapour from a water source, and droplets are inhaled. It cannot be spread from one person to another.

As a precaution and to ensure more were not at risk, the William Harvey's water system has been flushed through and the use of baths, showers and water births has been stopped until all the fittings were disinfected.

The HPU's Dr Chandrakumar said that precautions taken meant patients were no longer at risk, but the source of the disease in the community has yet to be discovered.

Anyone who has visited the William Harvey between July 27 and August 9 and has or develops a flu-like illness or chest infection within 14 days should call their GP or the helpline on 01233 616161.

New eco food depot to rise from the ashes

A MULTI-million pound food distribution depot is set to create hundreds of jobs when it opens in Paddock Wood.

The new 3663 First for Foodservice depot has been built on the same site as a former Whirpool warehouse, which burnt down four years ago.

The food distribution company behind the new £17.6 million depot will merge its Edenbridge and Sevenoaks branches, and will eventually employ a team of 350 staff.

The company's chief executive, Fred Barnes, said the materials on the former Whirpool site were reused for the new eco-friendly development. He said: "Transport and distribution aren't high up on anyone's list of eco-friendly businesses, but we set out more than a decade ago to make this business as green as it could be."

Switch over gives green light to the environment

ALL the traffic lights in Kent are being replaced with cost-effective low-energy units.

This summer Kent Highway Services will complete its countywide replacement programme costing £1.7 million.

County Hall says the switch will save up to £150,000 a year on electricity bills, and the bulbs will have to be changed less frequently as the light-emitting diode units have a life expectancy of 10 years.

Environmental savings of carbon dioxide are expected to total one tonne a year.

Kent County Council cabinet member for highways Cllr Nick Chard said: "The switch from existing halogen lamps will result in substantial financial and environmental savings."

This is a good example which shows 'going green' makes sound business sense."

There are 290 road junction controllers and 377 pedestrian crossing controllers which are being switched under the two-year programme, due for completion in September.

Fields papered over with bad smell of sludge

EXPERTS have been called in to deal with another revolting smell drifting over Swale.

Environment Agency officers were first asked for help last month after families complained of a nauseating smell.

The odour, at first wrongly dubbed the Sheppey Stink after appearing to originate on the island, was actually tracked down to paper sludge spread over a field just south of the M2 near Sittingbourne.

Agency experts have been working with the farmer and contractors to reduce the smell as quickly as possible.

Steps taken include spreading an odour suppressant – potassium permanganate – over the field and ploughing the paper sludge further into the field.

Waste products

But after receiving another 70 phone calls on Wednesday complaining about another smell, EA officers returned to Swale to see what they can do.

Alan Cansdale, environment manager for the agency, said: "People have had to put up with a series of bad smells in the area over the last few months.

"We would like to reassure them that we're doing all we can. Unfortunately, this seasonal spreading of sludge has coincided with a period of very still, muggy weather, which has made the problem worse.

"Under normal circumstances, spreading paper sludge and other materials is a very good way of using waste materials to benefit the environment."

Paper sludge is one of a number of waste products spread on to land for agricultural benefit or ecological improvement.

Witches and pagans flock to cathedral city

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

PAGANS have flocked to one of the spiritual homes of Christianity for a weekend of magic, music and witchcraft.

The annual Goddess Festival and Parade kicked off yesterday in the cathedral city of Canterbury, with visitors promised a large number of performances and exhibitors.

Wrongly associated with devil-worship and witchcraft, paganism is an umbrella term for a number of religions – including druidry and heathenry – which are almost all focused around nature.

Organiser Matthew Callow, 19, told Kent on Sunday he had received no complaints over choosing Canterbury to host the event.

He said: "Paganism has nothing to do with the Devil – that was just an old Christian concept used to scare people away from paganism. We have a saying 'harm none, do what you will', which means do whatever you want as long as it doesn't hurt anybody.

"Canterbury is very multi-cultural and all sorts of people and religions are welcome.

"We've had no problems at all and everyone has been supportive in what we are trying to achieve."

MISUNDERSTOOD?: Pagan beliefs look to a goddess as well as a god in their faith

A Canterbury Cathedral spokesman said he did not realise such a festival was taking place in the city, but added that "Christianity is the best form of religion".

He added: "People are free to make their own choices about what they want to do, but I think they're better off going to church."

Giants, drummers, dancers, stilt-walkers and magical performers were all due to take part in yesterday's opening parade through the main high street, which marked the opening of the festival in the Westgate Hall.

Today's opening ceremony takes place at 10.30am and will be led by modern witches Janet Farrar and Gavin Bone, who have written a number of books on paganism, magic and witchcraft.

Performances will be given by a number of spiritual groups including Faeries Wear Boots, and Dragonfly Moon, while visitors will be able to take part in workshops on dance, musical instruments and chanting.

Spiritual

Mr Callow said: "There are all sorts of things going on and anybody can come along.

"We are celebrating the freedom to express what we believe in because a lot of people still don't understand what paganism about. We believe there is a Goddess as well as a God, and that nature is sacred and should be respected.

"Hopefully as many people as possible come along and find out what it's all about.

"I have lots of friends who have no spiritual beliefs at all, but when I explain to them what paganism is they seem to understand it a lot more than some other religions."

Admission to the festival is £5 for adults, £2.50 for children and £2 for pensioners.

See www.goddessfestivals.co.uk for details.

Broken heart drove mum to kill herself

A GRIEVING mother-of-five committed suicide at the same beauty spot where her fiancé had drowned himself just weeks earlier, an inquest heard.

Darelle Anderson, who was known as Dee, took sleeping pills and went to Leybourne Lakes in Larkfield on October 16, 2008.

It was also where her partner Brian Anderson, with whom she had a baby daughter, had died eight weeks before.

A tribute on the website Gone Too Soon described her as "so full of life it bubbled all around her" and as a devoted mother to her five children Steve, Bradley, Paige, Alex and foster son Adam.

Devastated

Her friend Jane Adams said she was devastated after the loss of Mr Anderson because "they had promised they would grow old together and die together with their ashes mixed as one".

The couple used to take their baby, Alex, to Leybourne Lakes to feed the ducks together. "When I last saw Dee, she was just a shadow of her former self, under normal circumstances I do not think she would have dreamt of leaving her children, but she was such a deeply caring person and could not live with the heartache and guilt she felt for Brian," her online tribute reads.

At the inquest in Maidstone on Tuesday, coroner Roger Sykes, who recorded a verdict of suicide, said: "I know how badly affected Dee had been, to the extent that, though she had a very young baby, her feelings of grief overwhelmed her maternal instincts."

He said that social services had asked her friend, Sally Martin, to act as a carer for her children after Mr Anderson's death.

It was revealed at the inquest that she had told Miss Martin that she wanted to "join Brian" and she had written a letter three days before her death indicating she was contemplating taking her own life.

Mr Sykes added: "It is a very sad case."

Miss Anderson, 34, had only lived in Snodland for two years and had moved from Lewisham in south east London to make a "fresh start".

It was in Kent that she fell in love with her neighbour, Mr Anderson. Her friend Miss Martin is now bringing up their child, according to the online tribute.

Rare moths thriving at castle

A HISTORIC Kent garden has proved to be a paradise for hundreds of butterflies and moths, a new survey has shown.

The warden and a volunteer have found 221 moth species and 20 different butterflies over the last month at Sissinghurst Castle Garden, which is run by the National Trust.

Moth survey volunteer Steve Brody said the best time to spot them was 4.30am as the sun rises across the Weald when exotic species, such as the bright pink elephant hawk and bordered beauty, can be seen.

Warden Peter Dear said butterflies found in the gardens included the rare white letter hairstreak, which has suffered a dramatic decline recently due to disease.

I've got a new heart and lung, and now I've won gold too

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

A CYSTIC fibrosis patient given a 30 per cent chance of survival has beaten the odds by striking gold at the British Transplant Games.

Sevenoaks resident James Baxter picked up four medals at this month's event in Coventry – nine years after successfully undergoing a dangerous operation for a new heart and lung.

The 35-year-old told Kent on Sunday that while the transplant affected his health at first, participating in the games every summer had helped him get back on his feet.

He said: "I was born with cystic fibrosis and by the time I was 26 I needed a new lung. Because of the way technology was at the time, it was better to undergo a heart transplant as well.

"The survival rate has improved rapidly since, but for me it was only 30 per cent at the time, so I consider myself very lucky."

Cystic fibrosis is the UK's most common life-threatening inherited disease, affecting more than 8,000 people nationwide. It affects the internal organs – especially the lungs and digestive system – by clogging them with thick mucus.

More than 900 patients suffering from a wide range of illnesses took part in this year's games, which are organised every year by the charity Transplant Sport UK.

James has won medals at all nine he has participated in, but his badminton doubles victory earned him his first gold. He also scooped silver in the track relay and bronze in the long jump and archery.

James said: "People awaiting transplants are often worried they won't be the same again, but the games show that it doesn't have to be that way. It also reassures people who are considering being donors that their organs really can help people a great deal."

According to Transplant Sport UK, the number of potential donors in the country is falling, while the number of people waiting for a transplant is on the rise.

Last year about 2,800 lives were saved or dramatically improved thanks to the generosity of donors.

SUCCESS: James Baxter won his first gold medal at the British Transplant Games in Coventry

Cash to bring empty homes back into use

PEOPLE who own empty homes in Dartford are being offered financial help to bring them back into use.

No Use Empty, a Kent-wide initiative, has joined forces with Dartford Borough Council to help the owners of empty homes renovate their properties and create new accommodation.

Kent County Council has earmarked £5 million to help property owners pay for renovations to bring homes back into use.

The loan scheme is intended for any owner of an empty property, or someone who is considering buying an empty property, if the property has been empty for six months or more.

The owner can apply for a loan of up to £25,000 per unit to a maximum of £175,000.

The loan can be made on properties that have been empty for at least six months, as long as the property is sold or made available to rent after completion of the necessary works.

Fashion sales soar at centre

BLUEWATER shopping centre has announced a 2.1 per cent increase in sales for July, against the same month last year.

Fashion sales drove the success, returning an increase of 3.3 per cent compared to the previous year.

Many retailers reported strong demand for knitwear due to the poor weather, and a number of brands sold significant volumes of formal fashion for summer events, along with women's shoes and bags.

Catering also experienced a 5.2 per cent increase in sales, and foreign holidays did better than expected because of the poor weather at home.

Highways chiefs target illegal skips

FIRMS illegally placing skips on roads and pavements are facing a clampdown.

Kent Highway Services has introduced a £47 retrospective skip licence fee and firms that fail to comply could be fined up to £1,000.

Companies also have to pay £20 for every week the skip is on the highway and have been sent a reminder letter explaining why they must have a licence. Without one, they could create a hazard with the skip's location, lack of lighting and guarding, and time limits.

If a licence is not applied for within 48 hours, the highway service will take steps to have the skip removed and could start a prosecution.

Skip companies could be liable for removal and storage costs, and fined if found guilty.

KCC cabinet member for highways Cllr Nick Chard said: "The majority of skip operators are acting properly and we do not wish to disrupt their activity."

MORE passengers in Kent are set to experience the new high-speed rail service to London St Pancras ahead of its launch in December, writes Jenna Pudelek.

Southeastern says the preview of its 140mph trains will be extended to Ramsgate, Canterbury, Dover Priory, and Folkestone Central and West, from September 7.

Tunde Olatunji, Kent spokesman for the rail watchdog Passenger Focus, said: "Clearly these extensions to the preview are very welcome. What it does is start to expand the service to look more like it will come December [when the full timetable is introduced]."

"Passengers from Ramsgate and Dover can now join the high-speed service from their stations and there are times savings to be had, which are welcome. There is a cost attached and clearly we have general concerns about the affordability of premium fares."

Improvements

The preview of the service, which has been running since July from Ashford and Ebbsfleet, has been broadly praised.

All the new services will run at 'normal speed' to Ashford International, where the high-speed line begins. This means Ashford also gets an additional peak service on top of the current three trains to St Pancras.

Travelling from the Kent stations to St Pancras using the High Speed 1 (HS1) trains will cost passengers an extra £18.90 on a weekly ticket. Returns and singles will cost an extra £8.50 and £4.40 from all the stations respectively.

Mr Olatunji welcomed the choice the expansion of the preview will give passengers, but he said improvements were still needed for people using the mainline trains.

"With the Thanet services, with the currently track it takes up to two hours [to London] so infrastructure improvements are needed by Network Rail."

Rail firm extends high-speed service ahead of schedule

HS1: High-speed fleet is due in December

"The east Kent re-signalling programme to improve the quality of the infrastructure is needed and that should lead to faster services on the classic line."

Charles Horton, Southeastern's managing director, said the rail operator wanted as many people as possible to experience the service before its full launch in December.

He said: "We always hoped we could expand the preview service and thanks to the success of the first weeks we are now in a position to do this."

Mr Horton said the new services will "radically" improve journey times; for example saving 49 minutes on the average commute from Ramsgate and 47 minutes from Dover.

There will be two morning peak services from Ramsgate, departing at 6am and 7.05am via Canterbury West, and two peak services from Dover Priory, at 6.42am and 7.42am, via the Folkestone stations.

An off-peak service is also being introduced between St Pancras International and Ashford International via Ebbsfleet.

"The high-speed service means passengers from Dover will be able to reach London in just over an hour where it now takes nearly two hours, making it a town where you can now easily commute from," Mr Horton added.

"The high-speed services we hope will act as a real catalyst for the economy in the region, but above all, what the high-speed service provides is real choice for passengers."

Punctuality

Over the past four weeks passenger numbers have grown above expectation and the trains have achieved punctuality of more than 99 per cent.

Some 600 passengers a day have been using HS1 and enjoying the 37 minute journey time from Ashford, which shaves 46 minutes off the mainline time.

A fleet of 29 trains will come into service from December 13, running on the UK's first high-speed line.

ALL SHOOK UP: Always Elvis Gospel Group will perform the King's hits in Canterbury

Cathedral will host gospel according to king of rock 'n' roll

FORGET the chip shop, the spirit of Elvis is alive and well and doing gigs at... Canterbury Cathedral.

His songs will be blasting out for the congregation in the House of God during a one-off special performance in the nave.

While the King was shocking audiences with his swivelling hips, he also harboured a love of gospel music – of his 14 Grammy nominations, his three wins were all for gospel recordings.

Now, on the 32nd anniversary of the King's death, the cathedral is staging this unique event in aid of its fundraising appeal. His third gospel album, His Hand In Mine, went multi-platinum and is still selling well.

To mark the album's 50th anniversary in 2010, the Elvis Presley Fan Club, in association with the Canterbury Cathedral Appeal, will stage Elvis in the Cathedral, a concert of the King's gospel music on Saturday, April 17, next year.

The show will be performed by the Always Elvis Gospel Group, accompanied by a gospel choir for many of the songs.

Michael Davis, of the Elvis Presley Fan Club, said: "Their renditions of Elvis gospel numbers are heart-stoppingly perfect, so much so this group is now in demand throughout the country."

"The sound of these gospels, presented in the way Elvis sang them, will fill the cathedral with sheer joy – not only for Elvis fans, nor just for those who like gospel music, but for anyone with a love of good music."

Tickets range from £25 for a top-priced seat to £7, with all proceeds going towards the Canterbury Cathedral Appeal.

It has now reached £9.3 million, but there is a long way to go to reach the £50m target.

The donations have helped pay for vital conservation work to the fabric of the cathedral and through the modernisation of the Choir House, the continuation of the historic choral tradition.

Wet summer is good news as water levels return to normal

WHILE July's heavy rain dampened most people's spirits, officials at the Environment Agency were celebrating.

The agency says water levels are now back to normal for the time of year.

In Kent the average rainfall for July was 78.9mm, or 165 per cent of the average rainfall expected for July. Rainfall in April, May and June was low and water levels in rivers, lakes, ponds and streams were reaching worryingly low levels, said officials.

The agency received several reports of fish in distress after a period of hot, dry weather in June. But heavy rainfall last month has restored the balance and now river flows, reservoir levels and groundwater are all within healthy ranges.

Simon Pearson, strategic environmental planning manager for the Environment Agency, said: "At the end of June our water situation was looking very worrying for wildlife. We had had three months of warm, dry weather and the environment was really starting to suffer."

"Nearly twice the normal rainfall for July across large swathes of the region has improved the situation and water levels are back to normal in most places. However, if we have another hot, dry period in August we could see more problems for wildlife."

"We would urge members of the public to look out for their local environment. Any incidents can be reported to the Environment Agency on 0800 807 060."

Survivor makes cancer film

By CHRIS MURPHY

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

BREAST cancer survivor Janet Tucker has joined actress Sheila Hancock to make a video urging women to fight back against fear of the disease.

Keen ramblers Janet is now 60, but the Bromley woman said she was in fear of her life when she spotted something was wrong.

With treatment, she is now leading a healthy life, and is urging all women to check themselves and seek medical advice the moment they detect anything is wrong with their breasts.

In the short video made by Cancer Research, Ms Hancock said: "Well over 20 years ago I was diagnosed with cancer – breast cancer – and I was terrified.

"But thanks to medical science, here I still am. And the most important thing was that although the prognosis in those days wasn't very good, I actually detected mine quite early and how did I do that?"

"I did it myself by regularly feeling my breasts and feeling that something was amiss.

"And my instinct told me that I needed to pursue it, which I did.

"The most important thing is to get tested early or better still, know your own body. And with the help of your husband or your partner maybe, discover anything slightly different and do something about it.

"Don't be frightened. Be like me, be hale and hearty when you're old, despite breast cancer."

It's a message back by Mrs Tucker who got the bad news near Christmas five years ago.

She said: "I first noticed there was something wrong when I was in the bath.

"My nipple didn't look right, it was a bit inverted. I put that down to the cold weather.

"I didn't particularly want to go to the doctor straight away because I had so much happening.

Checked out

"We were moving house and waiting to complete and exchange but after a week or two I decided I ought to get it checked out, which I did, and the doctor immediately arrange for me to go to the local hospital to meet the breast surgeon.

"When I was told it was cancer, my heart sank to my boots. I knew I would have to have an operation and it's very difficult when you have family – it is a worry."

Her treatment involved surgery, followed by chemotherapy.

She said: "I went into hospital for a lumpectomy on the Monday, where a small lump of breast tissue

DON'T LEAVE IT: (l-r) In a new health video, cancer survivor Janet Tucker and actress Sheila Hancock urge women to seek medical advice was removed with the cancer, and I came out the following Friday.

"I moved on the day I came out of hospital so I had lots to look forward to."

The school administrator had signed up for dance classes, and said: "I've been line-dancing for 12 years. Other members of my club were supportive when I was going through my treatment, and I used to go along and watch the dancing even if I couldn't go up and dance.

"I would say to any woman who notices anything wrong with her breasts to get it checked out as soon as possible.

"Hopefully there won't be anything wrong, but if you do need treatment the sooner it's started the better.

"I've had so many good things happen to me since I've had my treatment."

The film is being screened at GPs' surgeries in Kent and the rest of the UK, plus it can be seen online at www.spotcancerearly.com.

The earlier the diagnoses and treatment start, the better chance of survival and recovery, they said.

At least 5,000 deaths a year in the UK could be prevented if the disease was diagnosed earlier, the group said.

Janet said: "Check yourself regularly and if you find something that's not normal for you, get it checked out as soon as possible.

"If you do need treatment, the sooner it starts, the better. When told I thought the worst – I thought my days were numbered."

Cables to be removed from beauty spot

POWER lines are coming down at Cobham Park, near Rochester, in the Kent Downs Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

EDF Energy Networks has invested more than £150,000 in the project to remove nearly a mile of overhead electricity lines, 19 wooden support poles and a transformer from the landscape near the Darnley Mausoleum.

Engineers have finished installing replacement underground electricity cables and on Monday started work on removing the power lines and wooden poles. This final stage is due to be completed by the end of the month.

Tim Owen, of the Kent Downs AONB unit said: "It is fantastic to get this project completed, it is another step towards the enhancement of this special landscape."

Brothers had terrorised own gran before Baby P

EVIL brothers responsible for the death of Baby Peter had also been accused of terrorising their own grandmother into including them in her will, writes Steve Knight.

The shocking allegation emerged this week after the youngster's mother Tracey Connelly, 28, and her partner Steven Barker, 33 – who are both now behind bars – were finally identified by the courts.

It was also revealed that fellow defendant Jason Owen, 37, from Bromley – previously referred to as the couple's lodger – had changed his surname and was actually Barker's older brother.

In 1995, the siblings were charged with assaulting their 82-year-old grandmother Hilda Barker, from Whitstable, in an attempt to make her change her will.

The case was dropped when she died and was unable to give evidence in court, but she had earlier told police how her grandsons had once locked her in a wardrobe.

Former neighbour David Cole revealed to the BBC how he was unaware at the time what Mrs Barker was being put through.

He said: "As we understand, when she got sent to the home then that's where we really found out what happened – bruises to her body, getting locked up in a cupboard.

BRUTAL: (From left) Connelly, and brothers Barker and Owen were jailed for Peter's death

"They used to wear Halloween masks to frighten her, maybe all along to get her to change her will to the boys' names."

Mr Cole also revealed how whenever he spoke to his neighbour over the garden fence, she would always be flanked by the brothers.

He added: "Always one either side of her. One day she just happened to raise up her arm and said 'look, I've got all these bruises Dave'. I asked 'how did you get them?' and then one of the boys said 'oh, she fell over'."

Seventeen-month-old Baby P – now identified as Peter Connelly – died after receiving sustained abuse at the hands of his mother and the brothers in Haringey, north London, in August, 2007.

In May this year, Connelly and Barker were given minimum terms of five and 12 years respectively for allowing his death, while Owen – who has a teenage girlfriend – was jailed for three years.

Barker was also given a life sentence for raping a two-year-old girl in a separate court case.

A judge had previously ordered that none of the defendants could be named because Peter had four siblings who were still being placed with alternative carers.

Last week Kent on Sunday revealed how the tragedy had led to an increase in the number of people from the county speaking out if they believed a child was being abused.

According to the NSPCC, just over 2,200 people had called its 24-hour helpline between April, 2008, and March this year.

Competition to capture Kent's changing ways

KEEN photographers are being asked to get out and about this summer to take pictures showing the changing nature of the county's environment.

The Capturing Climate Change competition run by Kent County Council is for digital photographs, is open to all ages, and there are a range of prizes to be won.

These include family tickets for Howletts and Port Lympne, Eagle Heights, Quex House and Gardens, the Powell-Cotton Museum, and a Kentish Lady River Cruise.

Other prizes are entry tickets to Bewl Water, KCC walking packs and a memory card from the Pantiles Camera Shop.

The images will go on show at the Environment Awards for Kent Business in September.

The pictures must be taken in Kent, but there's no time limit. They can reflect different seasons, or be taken in previous years.

Kent on Sunday editor Ian Patel will be one of the competition's judges.

The closing date for entries is September 5. For more information visit www.kent.gov.uk/greenkent.

Everything's coming up rosé for our winemakers

FOUR Kent vineyards were popping the corks after doing well at this year's Decanter World Wine Awards.

While Bordeaux, Champagne and even Chablis, may spring to mind when considering the best wines in the world, it seems Cranbrook and Tenterden need to be added to the list.

The organisers of the most influential and prestigious wine competition in the world, said the Kent winemakers have put the county on the global wine map.

The awards attracted more entries from producers across the globe than ever before, yet despite the increased competition four Kentish wineries scooped an impressive nine awards

CHEERS: Richard Balfour-Lynn, winner of the Regional Trophy

By CHRIS MURPHY

between them, including the much-sought after Regional Trophy.

The Chapel Down Winery in Tenterden scooped five medals.

They were two bronzes for its Rosé Brut NV and Pinot Reserve 2004, plus three that were commended. They were Century Extra Dry NV, plus Brut NV and Bacchus Reserve 2007.

Boss Guy Tresnan said: "We are delighted to have been recognised for the quality of our wines, particularly as these awards are international."

"After the announcement we got calls from around the world from potential trade customers and consumers, genuinely engaged by what we are doing here in the heart of the Kent."

Meopham Valley was awarded a commended for its Brut 2004, and a bronze for its Rosé Brut 2005.

Owner David Grey said: "This year's success validates our wines internationally as well as validating them to our consumers."

Gusbourne Estate Vineyard in Ashford took a bronze for the Classic Blend 2006.

And Hush Heath Manor in Cranbrook won a Regional Trophy for its Balfour Brut Rosé.

Richard Balfour-Lynn, producer at Hush Heath, said: "We all feel enormous pride at winning the Decanter World Wine gold medal and trophy.

"This gives the whole team involved with Balfour Brut Rosé a huge boost and provides the encouragement to know that we are on the right track in creating an English pink fizz that can compete with the best French Rosé Champagnes."

"The passion with which we grow our grapes and make our wine, combined with enormous attention to detail, has led to us winning this prestigious award."

Christelle Guibert, Decanter's tastings director said it was a great result for the county.

She said: "This is a fantastic result for UK wines and further proof, should anyone need it, that home-produced bottles can compete at an international level."

"The raft of awards for England and Wales this year is testament to the world-class quality of locally produced wines."

"It is a delight to be able to showcase them in our globally recognised competition."

Kent did so well it has helped convince the chairman of the awards, Steven Spurrier and his wife Bella, to pick the region to embark on their very own vineyard.

Mr Spurrier recognises the value of the Decanter World Wine Awards for UK vineyards, and said: "I feel this year the awards have moved from being a successful wine competition into an arena where it is a beacon for wine all around the world."

Academy's £35m makeover

WORK has begun on a multi-million pound scheme to transform education at the Cornwallis Academy.

The £35 million project will see the construction of new buildings at the site in Linton, near Maidstone, to create state-of-the-art facilities.

The new equipment aims to revolutionise the academy and offer a 21st century building and curriculum for more than 1,700 students, aged between 11 and 18-years-old.

The facilities include a new four-court multi-use games area, a grass playing pitch, performing arts theatre and outdoor performance arenas.

The Learning Plaza will be at the centre of the development, which replaces traditional classrooms with large open-plan flexible areas and mezzanine floors.

The plan is a result of a deal between The New Line Learning Academy Trust, which includes Cornwallis and New Line Learning Academies, Kent County Council and contractor Carillion.

Works at the Cornwallis Academy are due to be finished by July, 2011.

A CONVICTED drug dealer who fled to Spain three years ago has finally started his 10-year jail sentence, writes Chris Murphy.

Used-car dealer Robert Colyer was granted bail after being charged with a string of drug offences involving millions.

He used that opportunity to flee to Spain.

But after extradition, he appeared at Canterbury Crown Court this week and was jailed for 10 years and four months.

The 41-year-old from Island Road, Hersden, near Canterbury, should have appeared in court in November, 2006, but he never showed up.

While he fled to the sun, he was found guilty in his absence at a trial in January, 2007, of conspiring to supply controlled drugs worth more than £2 million.

It was then the 10-year sentence was handed down by Canterbury Crown Court.

Judge Van Der Bijl has now increased that term by four months as punishment for not attending court.

The saga started when Kent Police was contacted by the Scottish Drug Enforcement Agency in 2005.

They were after a drugs courier, who turned out to be Colyer. Investigations led to his commercial garage on the outskirts of Canterbury.

Colyer was caught in Scotland with 100 kilos of herbal cannabis worth £300,000.

The subsequent investigation by the Organised Crime Unit at Kent Police revealed Colyer had imported 630 kilos of cannabis from Italy via Holland with an estimated street value of more than £2m.

Before he could face trial, he fled to Spain with his wife and two children.

Kent detectives tracked him to Malaga, and a European arrest warrant was obtained for his arrest.

In July this year, Spanish authorities arrested Colyer on behalf of Kent Police.

Det Insp Eddie Fox, from the Organised

Pair lead teams out at Wembley

LUCKY youngsters from Kent lived the dream by leading their football heroes out at Wembley.

Christopher London, eight, from Orpington, and Harvey Luckett, eight, from Meopham, near Gravesend, escorted the stars of Manchester United and Chelsea onto the world-famous turf before the two sides battled it out for the FA Community Shield.

The youngsters – who won a McDonald's competition to get to Wembley – also had the chance to meet England's 1966 World Cup hero Sir Geoff Hurst.

Sir Geoff said: "It's great to give these youngsters this experience as it's something they will remember forever."

Chelsea won last Sunday's game on penalties.

£2m drug courier who fled to Spain brought to justice

JAIL: Robert Colyer

Crime Unit, said: "It is very satisfying to finally bring this case to a conclusion.

"Significantly, Colyer was a major player in an international drugs syndicate that knew no boundaries. This was a particularly serious crime made worse by the fact the offender went on the run and lived as a fugitive for nearly three years.

"In bringing the offender back to Britain to serve his prison term, and having disrupted the drugs syndicate, we have probably saved lives.

"Drug trafficking fuels all sorts of criminality and has a devastating effect on the lives of already vulnerable people.

"Kent Police will do everything possible to ensure that offenders are held accountable for their actions and where they run from the law we will pursue them until caught and bring them back to Britain no matter how much time passes.

"Kent Police will now apply to the courts for the £92,000 in cash that was restrained by officers following the original investigation."

Firm launches new coach and ferry services

A CROSS-Channel ferry company is also getting into the commuter coach business with a launch of a Ramsgate to London service.

Euroferries said it will be making an announcement later in the year about the launch and pricing of the commuter service.

In a statement, it said: "Further announcements will be forthcoming in the near future, including Euroferries' partners, ferry services, timetable, pricing and booking arrangements in addition to further announcements regarding the introduction of Euroferries commuter coach service between London and Ramsgate."

The news came as it launches its ferry link between Boulogne and Ramsgate, having signed agreements with both ports.

Called the Bonanza Express, the fast service will be operated by Euroferries with Fred. Olsen by the end of the month.

Tourist traffic

There will be five daily crossings on its catamaran, which has a capacity of 146 first class and 570 additional passengers, carrying a combination of cars and coaches.

It can hit speeds of 38 knots, which the company says will enable it to cross the Channel in a time that competes port-to-port with the Channel Tunnel.

A second vessel will join the Bonanza Express service in the future, carrying a combination of cars and luxury coaches.

Euroferries chairman, Per Staehr said: "The signing of this agreement with Thanet District Council enables us to look forward to building a long term relationship with the community."

"Our new five-crossing-a-day high-speed service, will be focused on tourist traffic and takes full advantage of the new motorways, both to Ramsgate and Boulogne, along with the fast terminal facilities within both ports."

He said online bookings will be launched soon, along with details of the coach service between London's Stratford Hub and Ramsgate, serving Canterbury and Medway.

OPPORTUNITY: A wide variety of people take part in the Ride and Walk, meaning you're bound to make new friends as you explore

Explore the county as you support churches

AN EVENT that has so far raised almost £2 million for the restoration of churches celebrates its 25th anniversary next month.

Last year more than 1,200 cyclists and ramblers took part in the sponsored Ride and Walk, generating a further £147,000 for repairs to historic churches and chapels throughout the county.

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

Committee member Val Sparks said the event – which is organised by the Friends of Kent Churches – played a big part in protecting people's local heritage.

She said: "When you think many of the buildings have Norman origins and go back possibly 1,000 years, they will inevitably need re-pairs. Even new houses need almost constant maintenance, but with more churches it's on a much larger scale."

"There's also the problem that you can't get any old builder in when something needs fixing – they need to be highly skilled and know all about traditional techniques. The cost of it all can be very scary."

"That's why it's so upsetting when you get people who steal lead from church roofs, because it's so difficult and expensive to replace."

Carbon footprint

This year's Ride and Walk, which takes place between 10am-6pm on Saturday, September 12, will see about 750 churches across Kent opening their doors.

Participants can plan their own route and walk or cycle to as many different churches or chapels as they like.

Half of the money raised will go to a church or chapel of each participant's choice, with the rest donated to the Friends of Kent Churches to distribute to the buildings most in need of repair.

Mrs Sparks said: "Those who take part always find it memorable and enjoyable because they meet people they wouldn't normally meet and it gives them the chance to get out into our lovely countryside, too."

"Village churches in particular present an overwhelming sense of peace and tranquility. They reflect a community over generations and people have become more interested in them recently because restoration programmes and the like have made them more aware of their heritage."

"Normally the church is the oldest building in a community, and many of them are so quirky and fascinating."

The Ride and Walk is a national event that started in Suffolk in 1982, and is now held in 31 counties throughout the UK.

Kent's version began in 1984 and several of the founding committee members are still involved today.

Asked if she thought the event could survive for another 25 years, Mrs Sparks replied: "If we are as good at changing and adapting as our historic church buildings are then we will certainly still be about."

"Perhaps it will become even more popular as people start to use bicycles more, what with the price of fuel and looking to reduce their carbon footprints."

Flood gates to undergo vital refurbishment

A FLOOD barrier is being refurbished to ensure it can continue to protect 1,500 homes and businesses in Tonbridge.

The Leigh Barrier is made up of three large moveable gates that hold back floodwater, reducing river flows downstream.

It was built in 1981 and the Environment Agency has just completed initial maintenance work to overhaul and improve the gate-lifting mechanisms.

And work started this week to install an emergency lifting system.

This will ensure that if the gates ever fail, a back-up system will ensure the barrier can continue to do its job. This work will be complete by October.

The barrier has been used many times, but its biggest challenge was in October, 2000.

When torrential rain fell, water from the swollen river Medway was successfully held back, with the reservoir nearing its full capacity in just a few hours.

Neil Gunn of the Environment Agency said: "The Leigh Barrier has proved it can work extremely well under severe conditions and many people and properties in the area benefit from the barrier."

"With the effects of climate change, we are facing bigger challenges and need to make sure the barrier is ready for them."

For advice on flooding or to find out if your home is at risk, you can visit the website www.environment-agency.gov.uk or call Floodline on 0845 988 1188.

It's such a perfect day (to relax or do the chores)

RELAXING is the best way to spend a Sunday morning in Kent, according to a new study, but it could be pepped up a little by having more sex.

Gold Top milk commissioned YouGov to carry out an extensive

survey into what people in Kent and the rest of the county get up to during their Sundays.

After all that laying around, the next thing on most people's minds in Kent is doing the chores.

In Kent and the south of England, we still regard Sunday as a special day of the week.

Some 58 per cent of us enjoy a leisurely Sunday morning, spent reading the papers like Kent on Sunday, or watching TV, with 31 per cent enjoying breakfast with the family and 30 per cent indulging in a lie in.

The big downside to the day of rest for 48 per cent of Kent residents is doing the chores.

Amazingly, it appears Kent is recession-proof with 71 per cent saying it has made no difference to their Sundays. And a quarter claim their Sunday is simply perfect already.

When the Sunday Trading Act was introduced 15 years ago on August 28, there were those who thought it would decimate family life, but this report finds that simply never happened.

Just 19 per cent bother going to the shops, but 25 per cent said they enjoy devoting Sunday mornings to spending time with their family.

Peter Lynas, spokesman for Keep Sunday Special, said: "The fact that only 19 per cent of people go to the shops on a Sunday morning matches our own findings that there is little desire for increased Sunday opening."

"People enjoy their leisurely Sunday morning and don't want to leave the kids and head to work. They would rather enjoy a great breakfast together as a family."

But we still want the shops open, the report found, as we like the convenience should we need them.

A mere 15 per cent wanted to go back to the old days when they were all shut.

Slump, what slump? Kent pair top the league for towns with rising house prices

SALTASH in Cornwall may well be the best place in the UK to live according to a new national survey, but two towns in Kent are enjoying the fastest rising house prices.

Saltash has been revealed as England's top post-code with a low crime rate, stable house prices and a school in the country's top 20 league table.

But Sittingbourne and Folkestone, along with Brentwood in Essex, are seeing the biggest rise in house prices according to the huge survey into post-codes by website MSN Local.

Alastair Bruce, senior content manager for the site, said: "Criteria for best places to live is hugely subjective, however most people are concerned with similar factors such as good schools, crime and house prices."

No Kent school appeared in England's top 20, the site said.

Steve Payne, manager of the Sittingbourne office of Ward & Partners estate agents, said: "We do seem to be doing well. I would not say prices are starting to rise in the town, but they are hardening up."

"Perhaps everywhere else in the UK is still finding it really hard."

"For example, a few months ago if we put a house up for £150,000, we would have expected an offer of £130,000 to be accepted. But now, just a few months later, we expect to get around the £140,000 mark, so it seems people are willing and able to spend a little more."

"It's great news we have made this chart."

Quartet plead guilty to attack

FOUR men have admitted violence offences following an incident outside a town centre nightclub.

Adebola Alimi, 18, Nicholas Garcia, 24, Earl Williams, 25, Dare Adun, 20, and Ryan Findlay, 17, appeared at Maidstone Crown Court on Thursday to enter their pleas for charges relating to the attack in April.

Garcia and Williams, both from Hackney, east London, pleaded guilty to wounding with intent. Alimi, also from Hackney, and Adun, of no fixed address, pleaded guilty to violent disorder.

Findlay, from Holloway, pleaded not guilty to the charges and will appear at Canterbury Crown Court on Friday where he will stand trial. The other four will be sentenced at a later date.

All five men were originally charged with three counts of attempted murder, wounding with intent and violent disorder.

The attack, outside the Lockmeadow Complex, in Maidstone, in the early hours of April 24, resulted in the victims being treated for injuries at Maidstone Hospital.

Artist to record gallery progress

AS THE Turner Contemporary gallery continues to take shape in Margate, one artist will be keeping a close eye on the work.

Ramsgate artist Grace Ayson will be capturing the construction efforts in charcoal drawings especially commissioned to document the building.

Grace Ayson studied fine art at the Kent Institute of Art and Design and her work is currently part of the Turner Contemporary Open exhibition which showcases work from artists all over the county.

She will begin her project in September.

Elderly targeted by bogus caller

A CONMAN told an elderly couple their water supply might be contaminated, writes Jenna Pudelek.

The fraudster tricked his way into the home in Tunbridge Wells by saying he needed to take a sample of the water, as other people in the area had problems with the supply.

While the man was in the kitchen with the couple, another man appeared.

The men left after the residents became suspicious and started questioning them about who they were and what they were doing.

Nothing was taken during the incident on August 7 at 6pm, but after the men left the couple realised rooms in the house had been searched.

A similar excuse was used by a man who talked his way into the home of an elderly woman in Snodland, at noon, the previous day.

On that occasion only one man was seen, but it is believed a second person may have come in the house and taken money while the woman was distracted by the caller.

Det Sgt Dave Liffen said: "It's good people are becoming suspicious of callers and starting to ask them questions, but we want this to happen before they get into someone's house."

"If you live near an elderly or vulnerable person please keep an eye out for callers on their behalf, and if you think they would benefit from additional security advice please contact your neighbourhood officer."

IT'S not just humans who need an energy boost every now and again – it seems bees crave a quick sugar rush too, and gardeners are being asked to do their bit to help.

The RSPB has issued Kent residents with some advice to give the dwindling bee population a step up by leaving out special tasty sugar drinks for them.

It said bees are hardworking, hence the busy as a bee expression – but they do get worn out.

The charity said bees are incredibly important pollinators and now is their busiest time of year.

They will sometimes become exhausted and lie on the ground, seemingly dead, as they rest a while.

To give bees an energy boost, the RSPB said gardeners should leave a sweet drink made from sugar and water in among flowers. To make the drink, mix two tablespoons of white, granulated sugar with one tablespoon of water in a container the size of an eggcup.

Welcome treat

The wildlife charity does warn to avoid using too much sugar and it also recommends small containers so birds don't dive in for a sugary bath.

But don't be tempted to use honey as an alternative – it will do them harm, the charity said.

Hester Phillips, of RSPB South East, said: "Busy as a bee is a true saying – bees are working to keep the planet's food chains intact and they really do deserve our help."

"We've been getting more calls about bees than ever this year as most people have read that they are in trouble."

"Many people keep seeing bees lying on the ground and assume they are dead, but chances are they are having a rest."

"Much like us, a sugary drink could boost their energy levels and a simple sugar and water combination will be a welcome treat."

"Just make sure you only leave out the

ALWAYS ON THE GO:

Bees are among the most hardworking insects on the planet suggested small amounts and use a small cup so that birds can't get in it."

Wildflowers and crops depend on the creatures, but many species of bee are now under threat.

Habitat loss has already led to the extinction of three species, and several more are severely threatened, including the wild honey bee, the short-haired bumblebee and the large, noisy, garden honey bee.

Hay meadows and clover leys are now seldom seen in today's farmland, leaving little for bumblebees to feed on, so both farmers and conservationists need to do what they can to help.

Gardeners can also make a big difference by planting flowering plants that provide vital nectar and pollen for bees and other insects. Knapweeds, sunflowers and buddleia are among those plants that are valuable to wildlife.

The RSPB said: "Solitary bees also like to burrow into dry sunny banks or warm patches of bare earth in a lawn or border, even among a pile of stones. Try to retain such features in your garden."

WIN A TASTE OF ITALY

WITH

THE debate over the nation's favourite food continues – is it Chinese, Indian, or maybe Italian? One thing is certain, the British love affair with ethnic food continues to grow.

More and more Brits are trying Italian dishes when dining out and are also experimenting in their kitchens, and one dish that's definitely increasing in popularity is risotto.

So why have we taken so long to realise how delicious it is?

And there's a plus, risotto is incredibly versatile – it's a fantastic way of enjoying the best of our own seasonal produce or everyday leftovers and store cupboard basics.

Risottos are a staple dish of the Italian weekly repertoire and each region in Italy has its own speciality.

The regional preferences in Italy inspired Riso Gallo (Italy's leading risotto rice producer) to conduct a survey to see which risotto tickled the British palate – and the results are in. The top five risottos are: 1) Asparagus, 2) mushroom, 3) seafood, 4) chicken, 5) primavera (vegetables).

On the back of this, Riso Gallo is encouraging foodies to find out their own favourite risotto flavour and is offering eight readers the opportunity to win a luxury hamper of its range of products to cook with.

Each hamper will include a Riso Gallo apron, risotto timer and other Riso Gallo goodies including a pack of Risotto Pronto (available in a variety of flavours).

To enter, simply answer the question below and send your entry on a postcard along with your email address (if applicable), name, address, and daytime telephone number to Riso Gallo Hamper Competition, KOS Media, Apple Barn, Smeeth, Ashford, Kent, TN25 6SR. The closing date is August 28.

Question: Which risotto came out on top in a recent survey carried out by Riso Gallo on the British public?

Mystery over how man was injured

A MAN was found lying in an unlit road at night suffering from serious head injuries.

Police say they do not know whether the 26-year-old had been hit by a car or had fallen and banged his head.

The man was taken to the QEQM Hospital at Margate and then transferred to King's Hospital in London where he is in a serious condition. He was discovered in Calcott Hill, Sturry, on Saturday, August 8.

Officers were called after drivers found the Canterbury man lying in the dark road at 10.40pm.

Det Sgt Elly Heard said: "Friends have told us that he spent the early part of the evening in Herne Bay before catching a bus home to Canterbury with them."

"As the bus reached the Punch Tavern at 10.30pm it appears the man got off to go to the toilet. From then it is unclear what has happened – he may have been clipped by a passing car and knocked over."

Dog owners face penalty for foul up

DOG owners who fail to pick up after their pets may now face £80 fines from Medway's PCSOs.

The move to allow the community support officers to issue the fixed penalty notices comes in response to complaints from residents.

Medway Community Safety Partnership manager Neil Howlett said: "Two issues that Medway residents tell us upsets them the most is littering and dog fouling."

"The council taxpayer ultimately picks up the cost of this being cleared away."

Inspector Vaughan Lukey, from Medway Police Station, added: "This is an excellent example of Kent Police in Medway working with Medway Council to ensure local concerns are addressed effectively."

"We are committed to responding to community needs."

The £80 fine is reduced to £60 if it is paid within 10 days.

A FEMALE war veteran who signed up to avenge the deaths of her husband and brother has died at the age of 96.

Kathleen Fortescue Russell, who grew up in Kent, served in the Women's Auxiliary Air Force (WAAF) for four years and played an important role as a Bomber Command officer.

Her death acts as a reminder that it was not only British men who led the Allies to victory over Hitler and the Nazis, but women too.

Dr Jon Russell said his late mother – known to friends and family as Kay – felt duty-bound to join the war effort after her first husband Eric Fortescue and brother John Sherman were both killed in action.

He said: "Kay carried a wound that would never heal. She joined the Air Force out of anger and a sense of duty to continue in the absence of her loved ones.

"She would say to me on numerous occasions that 'Jerry could not get all of us'.

"Kay was a fighter and stood tall and strong to her final days.

Pride

"She took particular pride over being able to take over a man's job such as assistant to Sir Arthur Harris at Bomber Command.

"She was never short of stories and never afraid to tell them, despite the emotions they could provoke.

"She also had a sign outside her house that read 'war is not the answer', and people respected her for that."

Born in London on October 15, 1912, Kathleen Sherman was brought up by her mother Edith at a small boarding house in Herne Bay, and she later won a scholarship to attend the exclusive Faversham Girls' School.

She met her first husband Eric while working at Westminster Bank in London, but was married for just six months before he was killed by a seamine during an RAF air-sea rescue mission shortly after the onset of war.

Upon joining the WAAF in 1941, Kay first worked as assistant station adjutant at Biggin Hill airfield, Bromley, before being promoted to the role of staff officer at Bomber Command.

She met her second husband Roger Russell – a member of the US Air Force – towards the end of the war, and the couple married in 1945.

'Kay was a fighter until her final days'

Female Bomber Command officer remembered

Kay spent the majority of her life supporting Roger's career as a neuroscientist and vice-chancellor of three American universities before his death in 1999, after which time she moved to Atlanta, Georgia.

Andrew Chapman – son of Kay's cousin and dear friend Kitty – said she would be greatly missed by all who knew her.

He said: "Whenever I met Kay the tempo of the day was lifted for the better. She was always the most stimulating company in the best possible way.

"She had a very eventful life – some both massively and regrettably forced on her. A lesser person could have crumbled, but not Kay who overcame the odds and had a well-spent life.

"So from a difficult start – including being brought up in the early days in a boarding house in Herne Bay when she had to sleep in the garden when a bed was needed for a paying guest – much was achieved and overcome."

Landlord to pay almost £10,000 for breach of health and safety

A PROPERTY owner has been fined £9,030, plus costs, after breaching so many health and safety regulations he left magistrates "horrified".

Dartford Magistrates Court gave Paramjit Singh Bansal, 51, almost the maximum punishment the law allows after broken fire doors, a broken fire alarm and an unsafe electrical system were found in his rented property in The Grove, Gravesend.

Bansal, who rented out rooms to several families with children, pleaded guilty to two breaches under the Management of Houses in Multiple Occupation Regulations 2006.

Shut down

Officers from Gravesham Borough Council initially visited the property in The Grove in August last year and, following their findings, served a Prohibition Order and shut down the property.

Magistrates said they considered this case to be "at the very high end of the scale" and gave Bansal a £4,515 fine for each offence and ordered him to pay Gravesham Borough Council's court costs of £575.

Cabinet member for housing Cllr Antony Pritchard said: "Unsafe homes will not be tolerated. Landlords have a legal and moral obligation to ensure their tenants' safety in their property.

"Gravesham Borough Council is working closely with landlords in the private rented sector to encourage a high level of health and safety standards."

Family mourn loss of their 'big friendly giant' killed in crash

THE devastated family of a father-of-one who died after crashing his car in Selling has paid tribute to their "big friendly giant", writes Simon Robinson.

Mark Phillips' parents, Margaret and Brian, and three sisters Wendy, Lisa and Kelly said the 37-year-old was the life and soul of the party.

In a statement released through Mid Kent Police, the family said: "He was very sociable and had so many friends. He made everyone laugh so there was no way you could be miserable around him. He would do anything for anyone and we will really miss our lovable big friendly giant."

Goodbyes

Mr Phillips, from Sittingbourne, died after his grey Ford Escort came off the road at 3am on Sunday, August 2.

An inquest into his death was opened and adjourned at Ashford Magistrates Court on Friday, August 7.

Mr Phillips leaves behind son Marc, 13, and 11 nieces and nephews.

His funeral will be held at Robin Hood Lane crematorium, Chatham, on Tuesday, August 25, from 1.20pm.

The family said: "We want everyone who knew Mark to say their goodbyes at his funeral, but we don't want anyone to wear black. We want it to be a celebration of his life and give him a really good send off."

Donations to the family can be made via Doves Funerals, 1 Knightrider Street, Maidstone ME15 6LP.

BACK TO SCHOOL SWAPSIES

Going back to school with new stationery seems to be compulsory for kids – not least because most love stationery and want to stand out from the crowd. The list can seem endless – pencil case, pens, highlighters, stapler, calculator, ruler, notebooks, paper, files and so on. And then there's different sizes, styles and colours to choose.

But have you ever wondered – when you're buying new pens and pencils case for your children – what happens to all those perfectly good unwanted ones?

For most families they simply end up in a cupboard or drawer, taking up valuable space, or even worse they're thrown away.

But now Staples has come up with a solution. It has joined forces with the charity READ International to launch Back to School Swapsies, major initiative that aims to ship the UK's unwanted pencil cases and pens – as long as they are in working order – to schoolchildren in Tanzania and Uganda.

All you have to do is drop the pens and pencil cases off at your local Staples store and Staples will give you a £1 voucher to spend on anything from a scientific calculator to that all important maths set. READ International will then collect, sort and ship the stationery to Africa.

This latest initiative builds on the work of the charity, which has a 500-strong student volunteer network, responsible for redistributing disused text books from the UK to Africa. Since its launch in 2003 it has shipped nearly half a million books.

READ Director Rob Wilson said: "This is a fantastic idea, which we hope will capture the imagination of young people and get them thinking about recycling, their own environment and helping others. I have seen first hand the huge demand for basic stationery like pens and pencils in East African schools and know that hundreds of thousands of school children in Tanzania and Uganda will benefit from this initiative."

Staples has also agreed to donate new pens and pencil cases to the charity. They will be shipped to Africa later this year, together with the latest batch of text books. Schoolchildren in Tanzania and Uganda follow a syllabus almost identical to the UK, but as one of the poorest regions in the world, teachers often lack the resources needed to teach.

Putting politics before

By JAMIE MCGINNES

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IT IS one of the defining images of the 20th century.

The picture beamed back from the Moon of astronaut Buzz Aldrin saluting the American flag filled hundreds of millions of people around the world with awe.

Yet it could have been very different if Nasa had had its way, according to former BBC Aerospace Correspondent Reginald Turnill.

The world's oldest working space correspondent, now 94, recalled how Nasa had actually wanted a United Nations flag to be planted on the lunar surface, not the Stars and Stripes.

When America's Congress found out about Nasa's plan, just before the Apollo 11 launch, they quickly jettisoned it.

"Looking back 40 years, it's clear now that Apollo 11 marked the end of Nasa's golden years," recalled Mr Turnill, from his home in Sandgate, near Folkestone.

"The world's best space brains were recruited, from America, Germany and Britain – Australia and Canada, too – and were able to work together, with unlimited funds and no nationalistic inhibitions, to devise a way to send men to the Moon and back. It was a unique example of what can be achieved in such conditions.

"It ended just before Apollo 11 was launched – when the politicians put a stop to it once and for all.

"That was when Congress learned that internationally-minded Nasa wanted to erect a United Nations flag on the moon. They decreed that on that, and every subsequent landing, the Stars and Stripes must be flown to demonstrate to the world that the landing was entirely a US achievement."

LOOKING BACK: Former BBC Aerospace Correspondent Reginald Turnill, astronaut Neil Armstrong, and the iconic images of Buzz Aldrin

Mr Turnill even remembers the moment when the American flag that would be placed on the Moon was bought. Whereas some reports have claimed the flag had been specially made, Mr Turnill recalled it as being much more of a last-minute consideration.

"I was at the Cape, awaiting the first launch, when a young engineer was rushed out to buy a big Stars and Stripes, for which he paid $5.50, and which was hurriedly inserted into the Lunar Module. From then on raising the flag, with the military-trained astronauts saluting it, took precedence over the scientific exploration of the lunar surface."

From 1958 to 1976, as the BBC's Aerospace Correspondent, Mr Turnill was involved in one of the most exciting periods in the development of mankind.

While covering the space race, he met American astronauts and Russian cosmonauts and reported to the world when Neil Armstrong became the first man to set foot on the Moon on July 20, 1969.

Although he knew all of the astronauts on the Apollo 11 mission, Turnill, like many others has always been puzzled by the exact source of mission commander Armstrong's famous words, "That's one small step for [a] man, one giant leap for mankind".

He said that George Low, the astronauts' boss at Houston, fretted about the first words spoken by the first man on the Moon, predicting they would go down in history. He eventually approached Armstrong and asked him.

progress on the Moon

"I'd done broadcasts to that effect and the Sunday Times even ran a competition about who would be first."

"Now, the Press Kit and Flight Plan both showed Armstrong as the first to descend from the Lunar Module to the lunar surface. Why the change?"

"The public affairs people waved the matter aside. It wasn't important. It was really an engineering decision: the way the door of the Lunar Module opened inwards made it more practical for Armstrong to egress first."

But the real reasoning was because of a preference for Armstrong over Aldrin, Mr Turnill claimed: "Nasa chiefs of course had been less than honest about it. The top executives had met and decided that just like Lindberg, who'd been the first to make a solo flight across the Atlantic, the first man on the Moon would be an immortal."

"And they thought the calm, reticent Armstrong was more suitable than the rather abrasive Aldrin to carry the fame that would follow. They'd then told Deke Slayton, the Chief Astronaut, to find a technical reason for the change."

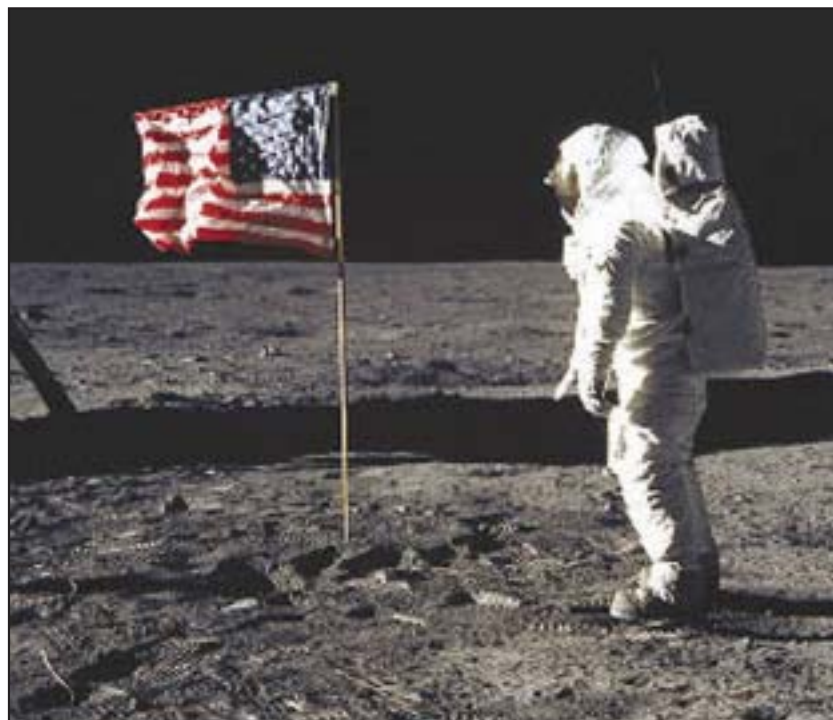

In spite of its huge eagerness to fulfil President John F Kennedy's 1961 goal of sending astronauts to the Moon before the end of the decade, Nasa also had a lot of concerns about the risk of the space travellers becoming ill during transit, or becoming infected by some sort of lunar bug.

Turnill said one of his most satisfying scoops before the landing came from chatting to Dr Charles Berry, the astronauts' personal physician.

"He mentioned that Nasa had invited President Nixon to have dinner with the astronauts the night before the launch. He'd pointed out that this would seriously prejudice his 'preventive medicine policy', aimed at ensuring the astronauts did not catch a cold during the mission, and making it certain that any infections they brought back came from the Moon and were not pre-flight infections."

"There was much alarm when I raised this with Nasa executives, who tossed it to and fro and issued a statement saying Dr Berry's view was only a recommendation. But in fact Dr Berry had made it impossible for the dinner to take place, and my story about the man who forbade the President from coming to dinner made headlines around the world."

In 1970, Mr Turnill was the first to break the news that Apollo 13 almost met with disaster while 200,000 miles away from Earth on its way to the Moon.

"At the end of a meeting one day, he said: 'Neil, have you thought what you'll say when you step on the Moon?' 'Yes, George' replied Armstrong, and departed without another word," said Mr Turnill.

"That resulted – perhaps because Armstrong complained, in a stinging rebuke for Low from Washington headquarters. Julian Scheer, the powerful head of public relations, scolded that it would be bad if it got out that they were coaching the astronauts in what to say. 'The truest emotion at the historic moment is what the explorer feels within himself,' he pontificated."

Mr Turnill, author of The Moonlandings – An Eyewitness Account, added: "There's some evidence that in conversation with Armstrong someone said a landing would be 'a giant leap'. But in the 60 hours closeted in that tiny spacecraft with two companions, Armstrong gave no hint what he would say."

In fact, it may never have been Armstrong who became the first man to step onto the Moon, but for the men at the top of Nasa, who felt he was a better role model than Buzz Aldrin, Mr Turnill revealed.

He said the bulky Press Kit and Flight Plan he picked up as he arrived at Cape Canaveral for the launch contained a big surprise.

"I'd had a top level briefing weeks before that Buzz Aldrin would be first to step on the Moon. Armstrong, as commander would follow the naval tradition of being last to leave 'the ship'."

Recession blues defied

ENJOY the best of Kent produce in the heart of Canterbury, at a brand new deli and cafe.

Husband and wife team Adrian and Tanya used all their savings to set up The Cathedral Deli.

"Despite little support from the banks due to the economic climate, worries from families and friends and giving up secure careers, we soldiered on," Tanya said. "Within the first few days the response to our little Kentish deli and cafe has been amazing and defied all our critics."

"We have been full every lunchtime and the public has loved the quality of the Kent products we use in our sandwiches and home cooking."

Their menu includes Kentish rarebit, a twist on the classic Welsh dish, which uses Ashmore Cheese from Cheese Makers of Canterbury and Shepherd Neame Spitfire Ale.

Another treat is shepherd's pie made with organic lamb mince from Monkshill Farm in Faversham and a Monmouth blend used in their coffees.

The deli can be found at 17b Burgate and is open from Monday to Saturday.

Branching out into juicy fruit

"KENT, sir - everybody knows Kent - apples, cherries, hops and women."

Apples and Kent have gone together since the days of Charles Dickens and the Pickwick Papers, and still today, the county is renowned for its high quality orchards.

The Garden of England's nickname as the 'apple capital' began with the founding of the first apple and cherry orchards at Teynham, during Henry VIII's reign.

This was followed with mass investment in orchards at the end of the 17th century, which led to the creation of fruit-growing patches in mid Kent and the Medway Valley.

Improved transport along the River Medway meant apples could easily be shipped to Rochester, before going on to London, where the prime consumers lived and worked.

By the end of the 19th century, Kent boasted thousands of acres of apple orchards.

Since then, the region has also aimed to provide a safe haven for the development and testing of new varieties.

None more so than at the 150-acre Brogdale Farm near Faversham, which has been home to the National Fruit Collection since the early 1950s.

This houses a total of 3,200 varieties from all over the world, 650 of which are British, and is one of the largest collections of fruit varieties in the world. It also plays a scientific purpose by providing a genetic bank to help preserve varieties.

RACHEL McATHY bites into a capital crop with a trip to Brogdale Fruit Farm

As well as the popular British ones, Kent also grows its very own native assortment of apples. This includes the Beauty of Kent, Maidstone Favourite and Faversham Creek.

One of the county's most popular native varieties is the simply named, Kent, a mix between the American Jonathan and the Cox's Orange Pippin.

Ted Hobday, chief guide at Brogdale, explained why Kent has a history of successful apple growing.

"The county has the right climate conditions for it," he said. "Apples need sun, rain, good soil and good drainage. We also have the cold winters for them to sleep through. Kent has it all."

But, although many of Kent's apples go on to be enjoyed just as they are, others can be transformed into refreshing juices or smooth ciders.

At Owl House Fruit Farm in Lamberhurst, they produce a range of apple juices from the products of their orchards, designed to ensure the just-picked flavour of the fruit is maintained.

After being collected, all their apples are washed and inspected and taken to the mill.

Here they are crushed and the pulp is drawn between two converging belts and passed through a series of rollers, gently squeezing the juice from the fruit.

Whether you prefer it as a crispy fruit or in its liquid refreshment form, Kent continues to provide some of the best spots to farm apples, focused on its two fruit-belts in mid Kent and the Low Weald.

And while there has been a significant drop in the acreage of orchards in past years, the county still remains England's premier apple-growing region.

Pay the price in Brazil

I was concerned by your article last Sunday headed "Brazilian jail hell of Brit 'fraudsters'."

These two people were only treated the same way as Brazilian suspected fraudsters would have been.

Everyone knows that conditions in Third World countries are lower than in Britain, so what do they expect? OK, they have not been convicted yet, but they could be.

I also admit, that as Brazil is in the upper echelons of the underdeveloped countries it could spend more on its prisons. However, supposing it had been the other way round, and two foreigners detained in Britain were suspected of fraud, how would the British feel if they demanded special treatment in prison?

Most UK people would expect them to be treated just the same as British suspects.

Focus on school CCTV

Referring to your front page of Kent on Sunday newspaper, I am appalled at the decision to stop the CCTV cameras in a classroom of Gravesend Grammar School.

Why not I say! What are they afraid of? If I had my way all schools would have them but unfortunately they are too expensive.

There is too much pandering to human rights and people's privacy, it was OK in the beginning but now it has become completely out of control in this country, no other country in Europe has taken it to the extreme like we have, we are the laughing stock of the world.

These teachers need to know what they are letting themselves in for and what better way than to see everyday life in a classroom to know what to expect and how to cope with daily routine. What is the problem?

There was no need for this in the past as we had a very important factor in all schools, it was called discipline, something most chil-

Shopping for a real solution

Looking at last week's feature on the problem of Margate's numerous empty shops it was obvious that none of the pundits contributing had any ideas that would offer a solution in the real world.

They seemed unable to face up to the simple fact that traditional shopping centres are never going to recover to their old levels.

Now that consumers have got used to convenient shopping in properly designed out-of-town centres there will be no going back to the old way. The current economic slump has merely accelerated a continuing process.

In any case, there are far too many shops in the UK as a whole, in my view. The sooner the landowners and councils that have been creaming money off of town-centre shopping realise that the party is over for them, the better.

It's time for some radical surgery to reduce the straggling parades of tat that mar so many of our towns. Condensed shopping areas that contain only successful businesses might have some chance of viability. Unfortunately the local political set-up in the UK is not set up to take this sort of action.

In any case, the area that symbolises Margate for most visitors is the front. I happened to be down there the other day (for the first time since the 1970s). It has an excellent beach of course and I was surprised that there are some really handsome Georgian and Victorian terraces fronting it, and in good condition too.

However, most of the stretch fronting on Marine Terrace and Marine Drive is an absolute disgrace.

Strangely enough, it's the newer developments at the western end that are the grimmest. It's a shame that some of the £15 million being squandered on the Turner art gallery couldn't have been spent on replacing this eyesore with something that would attract rather than repel.

ing the workshop and rolling stock.

The idea that I should like to put forward would be to supplement the existing workshop with a remote workshop (perhaps situated in the Dreamland main building), with a siding linking it to the present workshop site; as this siding would cross areas of the park where visitors would be walking, the track would either be laid in the style of a level crossing or be laid in the slightly different format of a tramway.

The scenic railway rolling stock would then be shunted to and from the remote depot by either a small four-wheel battery loco (eg, a Greenbat) or a small four-wheel petrol or diesel loco (eg, a Simplex). Any other traditional rollercoasters imported into a future Dreamland should be made to run on the same track gauge and be connected to the central workshop in the same way.

It should not be possible to argue that this would detract from the historic nature of the Scenic Railway as the existing workshop would remain for storage and some light maintenance, but the track at the exit would split two ways; one direction would lead as at present out on to the rollercoaster circuit, while the other direction would lead on to the trackwork leading to the central workshops.

This would have two advantages: not only would workshops and rolling stock be more likely to be kept safe in the event of a mishap on the rollercoaster structure, but also the locomotive shunting of rolling stock to and from a central workshop would cause traditional rollercoasters to be taken more seriously by the railway enthusiast movement, including bodies such as the Narrow Gauge Railway Society, as well as the various monthly magazines.

This, in turn, would open up more support for the project for the heritage amusement park for Dreamland.

I hope these comments will be considered helpful.

Think of the children

To bring up children to be good (Spare the rod..., Letters, August 9) it is only necessary for parents to behave well, set a good example and treat their children with kindness, consideration and respect.

Then the children will almost invariably grow up to respect their parents, respect themselves and respect others. In such circumstances punishment is not necessary, let alone smacking.

Children may not always be docile and obedient – but who wants to bring up doormats?

Of course, it is sometimes difficult, with all the pressures and distractions of the modern world, for parents, who may themselves have been badly treated as children, to behave well. But we must do our best, for the sake of our children, and our children's children.

Anti-camera whiners

Brian McDowell and Phil Granger's recent letters make me laugh. Mr Granger's states that six per cent of all 'accidents' are from speeding, let's start by getting the terminology correct, there is no such thing as an accident when you are behind the wheel.

It is a crash. Accidents by their very nature are unavoidable.

Most car crashes occur because of an avoidable action by a human being.

The actual percentage of the cause of crashes is far higher than six per cent; in fact most crashes can be attributed to inappropriate use of speed combined with the lack of ability and attention of the driver to road and weather conditions. All of these anti-camera whiners you so frequently publish are not living in the real world. They want cameras scrapped because to quote 'they are money-making tax generators' yet in their next breath say how councils are getting rid of them as though it is a justification of their argument.

One council, Swindon Council, is running a trial without them. The truth is the Mr McDowells and Mr Grangers of this world wish to flout the law and drive as they wish regardless of the safety of others or themselves.

I saw the aftermath of a fatal crash on Saturday night in Kent on a road with no cameras. The weather was fine and there was no other car involved. The car in question had rolled numerous times and the occupant blatantly lost control at speed. There was no other factor.

I had the misfortune to follow the ambulance for quite some time as it left the crash scene. There were no lights, there was no rush for the ambulance crew and there was no need for a paramedic to travel in the back of the ambulance because the poor soul who overestimated his or her driving ability on a sunny, summer evening was dead.

It would be interesting to know how many times the Mr McDowells and Mr Grangers of this world have been caught speeding by cameras. Is their true beef only that they are being hurt financially because of their driving habits?

Card debts set to cause even more financial headaches

By JEREMY GATES

WITH unemployment expected to top four million and many households already suffering from reduced income, there are fears that massive credit-card debts could trigger more economic turmoil.

Britain, where consumer debt in proportion to income has climbed above 170 per cent, is seen as more vulnerable to such a crisis than European countries and the United States, where the International Monetary Fund fears 14 per cent of consumer debt will turn sour.

The IMF believes consumer debt losses in Europe could hit £1.5bn – much of it in Britain.

A lot of this debt, such as sub-prime mortgages, was securitised – passed on to new holders – and the Financial Times warned that the impact could extend beyond banks, possibly hitting insurance companies and pension funds.

Our plastic-fuelled spending spree is unravelling fast. Outstanding card debt tops £64 billion, but with average interest rates at 18 per cent – or 36 times current Bank base rate – that's a big strain on the 40 per cent of card-holders who pay interest on outstanding balances.

Andrew Hagger at Moneynet.co.uk believes that card companies may have kept their rates high in defence against the looming problems.

He said: "If the debt situation worsens, rates could top 18 per cent. I see big write-offs coming, as an increasing trend."

Over two years, the noose has slowly drawn tighter on those who have overspent. The old trick – keep switching debt to new cards with 0 per cent balance transfers – is harder to pull off as providers tighten terms.

Capital One, a leading provider, has withdrawn 0 per cent balance transfers altogether. Barclaycard's 0 per cent offer on balance transfers is down from 14 months to 12 and other providers – including Royal Bank of Scotland and its brands, and HSBC – restrict balance transfers to existing customers.

MOUNTING DEBT: If people's debt situation worsens, rates could top 18 per cent

“Nearby everybody who could qualify for Virgin Money’s 0 per cent balance transfer for 16 months has probably got it by now,” Hagger says. “It’s been the first port of call for a long time.”

Hagger notes that a few products remain for clients with good credit records: Santander’s 0 per cent balance transfers runs for 15 months, while two others offer 0 per cent for 13 months – Halifax Mastercard and BT Visa Credit Card.

Daniella Lipszyc, solicitor and director at Ultimate Law, which advises card-holders in trouble, fears that some consumers face 50 years of suffocating debt.

“Introductory offers, such as 0 per cent balance transfers and 0 per cent APR for the first few months, get consumers signed up,” she says.

“Many don’t realise that once the initial period of the agreement ends, rates can rocket and interest payments can get out of hand.

“It takes almost 50 years to clear a debt of £5,000 by making the minimum repayment each month, on a typical APR of 16.9 per cent. Over that time, you’ll pay a staggering £10,773.93 in interest.”

Lipszyc argues that no

signed and properly executed agreements were completed for many new cards. Some lenders see this will cause problems if cases go to court and are hiring debt collectors to pressurise clients at home and at work.

“One of my clients has card debts of more than £150,000, but £10,000 is enough to get many into trouble,” she says.

Card providers, for their part, are also under pressure: they have lost rich pickings from the sale of Payment Protection Insurance with cards due to new regulations, and have seen penalty charges, which they levy on late payers, cut by Government action.

Spending power

But they can always raise rates. Lipszyc believes card providers have “terrific freedoms” despite the new controls.

“My husband had an AMEX card charging 19.6 per cent which jumped to 26 per cent – a 33 per cent rise – a few days after Bank base rate hit 0.5 per cent,” she says.

As problems deepen, Lipszyc thinks providers may accept deals – perhaps accepting a portion of a £10,000 debt – to tidy the books.

But the providers’ decision to raise the spending limit for many customers in recent months – without being asked to do so – could backfire badly. Price-comparison service uSwitch.com reckons 5.7 million people received a boost to their credit-card limit in the last year without being told about it, giving an average £1,538 per person for an extra £8.8bn of spending power.

“In the current climate, you could be fooled into thinking that increasing spending limits is a good thing as it stops people going over the limit and incurring extra charges,” says uSwitch’s Louise Bond.

“However, the issue is far more complicated. Providers are taking away consumer choice by throwing extra credit at people without their consent.

“Unless you regularly pay off your credit card bill in full, keeping high levels of debt on interest-bearing credit cards isn’t advisable. It’s an expensive form of borrowing.”

Peter Harrison, credit-card specialist at Moneysupermarket.com, says consumers must be aware of different rates charged on balance transfers and new purchases. A tempting 0 per cent on balance transfers might run for 12 months, while new purchases incur interest charges after three months.

Both Nationwide and SAGA cards, he says, offer a ‘positive hierarchy’ of repayment – money paid back each month cuts debt attracting the highest rate of interest.

“The fact is that many people who can’t repay debts intend to keep paying the minimum monthly sum required – usually one per cent to five per cent of outstanding balance – in the hope something turns up,” he says.

“It isn’t really the best way forward. If you don’t begin to start paying debts off, lenders may be entitled to increase rates because of higher risk.”

If you fear your card debts are out of control, the experts urge you to seek help – either from the card provider, or a debt advisor.

“The advantage of admitting problems is that the card provider is less likely to increase rates while the customer tries to sort things out,” says Harrison.

“Those who bury their head in the sand to avoid the problem could be most at risk of losing their homes in the months ahead.”

Keeping your PPI

If you think you have been mis-sold a policy, you can claim compensation. Find out how...

THERE has been much confusion around Payment Protection Insurance (PPI) in recent months, and the fact is that everyone needs to educate themselves on what it is and whether you need it, to ensure that you are not being mis-sold to.

If you think your policy has been mis-sold then there are steps you can take to ensure you get the compensation you deserve.

Here Martyn Paddon, senior practice manager at Bromley-based MTA Solicitors, dispels some of the myths about PPI.

WHAT IS PPI?

There are around 20 million PPI policies in the UK, generating over £5 billion a year for the companies involved. The policies cover repayments in the event that you are made redundant or unable to work due to illness or injury.

In many cases the policies are automatically added to a loan agreement regardless of whether the policy holder has requested one, and can increase the amount repayable by thousands of pounds over the life of the loan.

Consumers are often unaware of this taking place and many people fall outside of the bracket for which the policy applies. For example if you are retired, self-employed or not reliant on an income, you may not need or benefit from PPI as for a large part these policies cover you if you are employed and lose your job through redundancy.

When you take out a loan there are strict laws dictating how the loan is sold to you, which are there to protect you from unfair practices. The selling of PPI policies is regulated and falls within the Consumer Credit Act, which can be complex, so it is the lender who has to ensure that policies are sold correctly.

If the correct process has not been adhered to the PPI policy could be mis-sold and you may be entitled to a refund of the policy, plus interest. Also many sellers are paid commission on the sale, so are keen for you to take on Payment Protection Insurance regardless of whether you actually need it.

The financial regulator has been fining PPI companies for "not treating customers fairly", plus the Competition Commission has investigated the market and has placed a number of demands on lenders to curb these unscrupulous practices. But this comes as little relief to those consumers who have already been mis-sold PPI.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU THINK YOUR POLICY HAS BEEN MIS-SOLD

There are hundreds of thousands of potential mis-sold policies out there and it is possible to seek compensation on mis-sold PPI going back six years. So what are the options if you think you may have been a victim of mis-selling?

The biggest hurdle is knowing whether you've been mis-sold PPI in the first place. You may have taken out loans in the past and have no knowledge of whether the lender has even sold you PPI, as they may have wrapped this into the re-payment figure without you even realising. Often this can be ascertained by examining your loan documents carefully.

Many people embark on their own battle to try and recoup the money they have already paid on mis-sold insurance but lenders can drag their heels, only paying out the minimum (with no interest), or simply refusing to pay out at all. People then give up, thinking this is the maximum to be repaid, or that there isn't a case to be won. However getting some professional legal support at this stage would increase the likelihood that they would receive a lot more.

Choosing the services of claims management companies, who now offer PPI reclaiming services, needs to be thoroughly investigated before proceeding. Many of these companies have simply jumped on the bandwagon without the expertise and it's probably best to tread cautiously. Some charge an upfront fee which should not be necessary.

on the facts

UNSCRUPULOUS PRACTICES: many sellers are paid commission on the sale, so are keen for you to take on Payment Protection Insurance regardless of whether you actually need it

Seeking legal advice may be a more viable option, as most solicitors will charge on a 'no win no fee' basis.

By seeking professional legal advice, you stand a better chance of proving to the lender that the PPI policy has been mis-sold and obtaining proper compensation.

CHOOSE THE RIGHT POLICY FOR YOU

Consumers do need to understand this type of Payment Protection Insurance, ensure they need it and take on the responsibility to shop around. You need to take out insurance that's suitable for you and ensure the lender is giving you options.

You should be very wary if the insurance policy is tied-in to you receiving a loan.

Despite all the negativity around PPI, it is a very valid insurance if sold correctly, and should you need to make a claim, can mean the difference between losing everything and retaining your lifestyle.

Money fraud figures double in South East

By ALEX HOAD

BIG-MONEY fraud is at its highest level in decades and has almost doubled in a year in the South East.

The news comes from research by global financial powerhouse KPMG Forensic, which also revealed more than half the fraud in the UK by value takes place in the region.

More than 160 cases of serious fraud with charges of over £100,000 came before the courts in the first half of the year – the highest number in any six-month period since KPMG launched its fraud barometer 21 years ago.

The South East remains the UK's fraud hotspot, with 63 serious frauds taking place in the first six months of the year – up from 38 in the same period in 2008.

The value of the frauds was more than £350m – more than half of the UK's overall total.

Among the Kent cases were an Ightham man who claimed he was a land developer earning £90,000 a year to obtain two false mortgages worth £346,000.

A Swanley mechanic was implicated in a £38m stolen car ring, while two employees of a Kent insurer lodged bogus claims to defraud their employer of £462,000.

Investors were the biggest victims, losing £320m – mainly to professional gangs, which accounted for £450m of fraud nationwide.

Company managers were also responsible for defrauding their employers of £150m in 32 cases throughout the UK

DODGY DEALS: Hard times mean more people are driven to fraud by personal pressures, and more investors are willing to believe in bogus cooked-up investment schemes

Over a quarter of cases, worth £111m, were committed against financial institutions.

Commenting on the figures, Hitesh Patel, partner at KPMG Forensic, said: "These figures are bad, but the worst is yet to come."

"It will be a number of years before the impact of the recession fully feeds through into the fraud statistics."

"Hard times mean more people are driven to fraud by personal pressures, and more investors are willing to believe in cooked-up investment schemes."

"Companies too remain vulnerable to the threat within – their staff – as evidenced by the £150m of fraud that managers have been tried for in the last six months alone."

Getting Medway back in business

New council schemes will help economic growth

BY ALEX HOAD

WHILE the recession continues to bite across the country, individuals and businesses in Medway will soon be offered even more help to beat it.

The local council has developed a series of counter-recessionary measures, including a scheme to support graduates and a programme of business start-up grants.

These measures are designed to show support for local business start-up and growth as well as workforce development.

The measures are also targeted at the priorities identified in the council's new draft Economic Development Strategy.

Portfolio holder for strategic development and economic growth Cllr Jane Chitty said: "Combatting the recession is high on Medway Council's agenda and we are committed to doing everything we can to help business growth and job creation at a local level."

"Medway has built a very strong business sector, ranging from engineering and manufacturing to service industries and it is imperative that we build on this very sound foundation.

"These 10 counter-recessionary measures show our commitment as a council to support local residents and businesses."

The 10 measures are:

• Micro-enterprise graduate work placement scheme: It is important that students see Medway as a place to utilise their qualifications and skills.

This scheme will provide micro-businesses in Medway with access to talented local graduates – allowing graduates to gain valuable work experience and providing businesses with valuable skills. This scheme will start in the autumn.

• Business start-up grants programme: These will be grants available up to a maximum of £1,000, which will help budding entrepreneurs to start up their own businesses. Further information on this scheme will be available shortly and the scheme will begin in September.

• Partners for Growth (PFG) interest-free loan scheme: Previously, businesses wanting to apply for the scheme had to have a bank loan in place before they were eligible. However, many small and medium-sized companies in Medway have found it difficult getting extra finance from banks due to the current recession. In answer to this, Medway Council has relaxed the criteria of the scheme and companies no longer need to have a bank loan to apply.

• Medway Retail Conference and launch of Retail Champions scheme: On October 1, the Medway Retail Conference will mark the launch of the Retail Champions' scheme, which takes place at the St George's Centre in Chatham Maritime. It aims to support Medway's retail businesses by advising about local workforce training and business support programmes, covering aspects such as customer service skills, effective business development and marketing.

• Employ Medway: Starting in August, Employ Medway will focus on those people who are recently unemployed or have been made redundant. Employ Medway advisors will work with clients to enable them to review their options, look at addressing their training

• Managed workspace: Medway Council has more than 100 business units at affordable rents across three sites, including the newly opened Innovation Centre which provides high quality business space tailored for innovative, ambitious and dynamic businesses. All tenants receive personalised business advice and support at all of the council's managed workspace sites. The council has vacant premises ready and available to businesses with aspirations for growth.

• Transmanche Enterprise Network: An advice service to assist businesses to find new markets on the other side of the Channel.

• Eco-Advantage Scheme: A training and development programme for local businesses advising them how they can respond to the challenge of climate change while also reducing costs.

This scheme will become operational in the autumn.

• Creative Industries – business support and networking:

Support for the growth and development of Medway's creative businesses through the appointment of a dedicated business support officer.

cer. This role will also include implementing initiatives that will encourage networking between creative businesses as well as business partnerships with other complementary sectors, such as manufacturing. Medway Council hopes to recruit for this position in the autumn.

• Medway apprenticeships scheme in partnership with local training providers: The development of a new local apprenticeship scheme to provide valuable work experience to young people aged from 16 to 24. Opportunities will include apprenticeships within the council as well as with private sector contractors to the council. This scheme will start in October.

WHEN full-page adverts claim the price of gold has soared 30 per cent in the past six months alone, it isn't only those facing big debts or mortgage arrears who are tempted to turn old heirlooms and unwanted gifts into cash.

Strictly speaking, the claim isn't true. Gold is down about 18 per cent on the £700 level seen in February, while the dollar price is down from 1,006 to 955 in the same period. But this is unlikely to deter sellers who need cash.

Earlier this year, gold achieved its highest-ever price against sterling, the euro, the Swiss franc and the dollar in Canada, Australia and New Zealand – indeed just about everywhere except for the Japanese yen and the US dollar.

After years of steely jewellers looking dismissively at a well-worn keepsake and advising desperate owners not to waste their time, the internet is creating a world where it is much easier to turn surplus items into cash.

With British Government debt soaring towards a trillion pounds, Adrian Ash, head of research at BullionVault, the UK's leading online service for gold bullion investment, reckons the craze for turning valuable metals into cash may be only just beginning.

"When Cash4Gold, a big American company, gets going in Britain, you could see quite an impact on this business," he says.

"These boys are big enough to take a two-minute advertisement in the Superbowl. A significant amount of the booming level of scrap-gold supply may be down to the model they've established.

"Theirs is an impressive business model: heavy advertising, an efficient collection/distribution network and a cheque rapidly dispatched for vendors."

Website CashYourgoldNow.co.uk, which promises a "fast, efficient and very discreet"

Get ready for the gold rush service, is likely to feel the draught as the Americans arrive.

Its selling angle is that any unwanted old jewellery can be turned into instant cash for a holiday, a new outfit, bills or a special occasion.

The argument is a timely one because gold has been a relatively steady store of value through 18 months of financial turmoil which has wiped nearly £9 trillion off global share values. Most other investments, apart from US Treasury bonds, have headed south.

Jewellery

Ash says the "scrap side" of gold sales boomed globally in the first quarter of 2009, with a total value of 500-1,000 metric tonnes sold by owners seeking cash.

If private sales continued at levels seen earlier this year, the scrap side could soon generate more gold than the 2,500 tonnes annually produced by commercial mines.

"Heavy selling by private owners in Asia and the Far East is normal and what you would expect," Ash says.

"There is no banking network in rural India, so farmers turn profits into gold, not rupees, and then sell heavy 'investment jewellery' for cash in the planting season.

"What's new is the volume of old jewellery coming out of Western households. It is being sold off in greater volumes than at any time since the recession of 1979-81."

However, Ash thinks second-quarter sales might actually fall: gold prices tend to drift in summer, and sales have attracted less media coverage lately.

It is also possible, he thinks, that households have dumped items they thought about selling for years. Websites offer easier access to buyers, and a cleaner sale.

But are people selling too cheaply?

Krista Waddell at Ounces to Pounds, which organises 'Gold Parties', claims her 'tupperware-style' events in London, Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds and Scotland pay out £50,000 per week.

"Cash4Gold is short-changing Britain," she claims. "Its margin is chewed away on TV advertising and profit, and not put in the pockets of British consumers."

"With our parties, people see what they are getting, without delay. They get a good price there and then for unwanted gold, platinum and silver. No waiting, no hassle."

Waddell says her customers, mainly 45-plus and mostly women, are not turning valuables into cash to pay the rent.

"They have stuff sitting around and no other sales outlet, and they won't use pawnbrokers," she says.

"Often, they bought items in the 1980s when gold was a third of the price it is today. If they sell today at 50 per cent of value, they still make money. It's a fun evening, and it's an unusual sale which puts cash in your pocket!"

But even these sellers may regret their MONEY MAKER: Old jewellery can be turned into instant cash for a holiday, a new outfit, bills or a special occasion actions later, say lenders who accept your valuables as security for a loan and return them when the loan is redeemed.

Paul Aitken at leading online asset lender Borro.com says he has been following this market closely since it began in the United States 18 months ago.

"Too many people accept offers of 20-30 pence in the pound. Those who see jewellery as a way of getting money should consider all other options first.

"We can usually lend more money than they will get from a sale. They can come back, perhaps within two months, and have their goods back after we deduct interest.

"In close to 90 per cent of cases we take on, the customer gets back whatever item they have pledged. But this is a solution to short-term money problems, not long-term ones."

Aitken says that when such artifacts are melted down for their precious metals, any intrinsic value, both in workmanship and sentiment, is destroyed.

"If you need money in a hurry, don't sell under distress at a gold party because you are unlikely to get the best price."

Aitken says 'asset lending' is much easier since the internet reduced the need to find a pawnbroker: just go online, find out what an item is worth, send it off in a secure envelope and the cash is ready in 24 hours.

However, Borro charges four per cent a month on a loan of £1,000. Over six months, a £1,000 loan costs £300 interest.

Of course, any owner of valuable goods should think carefully before they sell.

Mark Gettinby, director of Intune, the financial services arm of Help The Aged, says it is important to be aware of security as you will be dealing with people you don't know.

"If selling goods online, never give out bank details and make sure you wait for any cheques to clear before parting with the goods," he advises.

"If people come to your house to pick up items, arrange a time when you are not alone. And if you're not selling goods through an auction marketplace, it's always worth getting a second opinion on the price offered to verify you're getting the best possible price."

Save by buying a car

BY STEVE LOADER

BUY a car in a recession?

It sounds mad, but there might never be a better time for some of us.

With savings accounts earning so little, you might make more by saving a huge wedge on a new car thanks to big discounts at the moment.

Fact is, there has been much hype about the Government-sponsored Scrappage scheme (see later story), but dealers have been knocking cash off cars for months – whether you have a 10-year-old 'scrapper' to trade or not.

There are other deals that can be factored in too, such as zero or low rate finance.

And don't forget to ask for trimmings like a tank of fuel, car mats or discounts on any add-ons you fancy.

Do your homework though to ensure you are not buying an unpopular engine or trim combination or, worse, a car on 'run-out' where production ceased a while ago.

After all, you don't want to trade your old gas guzzler for another just as thirsty or likely to depreciate badly.

Buy wisely though and your new vehicle could save on fuel, insurance, road tax and even depreciation, though cars always devalue unless they achieve classic status.

You can also afford to congratulate yourself for ditching something less efficient in favour of a modern and more eco-friendly model.

On the other hand, review your part-exchange; you might have lost tons on that big 4x4, but work out the running costs for the next three years – they might be much less

WISE BUY: Chevrolet's ultra-new Cruze (above) and the versatile Nissan Qashqai (left) are two models to tempt you if you decide to raid those savings accounts the motoring budget for most of us.

Many superminis sit in the lowest road tax band of £35 a year and though you might be tempted by new tax-exempt diesel eco models, just check the price against a standard version.

The eco supermini might save £105 road tax over three years, but how much will you pay upfront for it? A lot more and you might not think the driving experience is worth paying extra for either.

So, check out conventional equivalents of eco models and don't dismiss petrol power; the fuel is still cheaper and makes sense for lower mileage users, while emission and consumption levels are closing the gap on their heavier diesel equivalents.

than the cost of replacing it.

Road tax also favours downsizing – gas guzzling limos or 4x4s face £950 a year road tax from next year – but this is still a small part of

REASONS TO BE CHEERFUL

1 A brand new 59 Reg Picanto 5dr from £4,495.*

The Government and Kia will give you £2,000 towards a lovely new Picanto when you scrap your old car. Mr Darling, we salute you.

2 Group 2 insurance, just £35 road tax.

Combine that with incredible fuel efficiency of up to 57.6 mpg and you've got very low running costs indeed. Brilliant.

3 The Government giving away money.

Okay, so it's the same as reason one, but it's so good we couldn't let it slide. Just hurry, before they change their minds.

DOWNSIZING to a more fuel and tax efficient car must be just part of your recession-busting motoring plan.

The next stage involves smarter driving and journey planning and getting fitter by walking and cycling instead of using the car for short journeys – cold engines waste fuel and produce 60 per cent more emissions than warm ones.

Short trips also mean more servicing and engine wear – a moped or motorcycle might be a better option.

If you must drive, follow these tips from the Institute of Advanced Motorists and RAC Foundation:

- Plan your route to save strain on car and driver. Take the direct route – a sat nav can help – and go off peak if possible. Commuters should think about car sharing, Park and Ride bus schemes or other public transport.

- Have your vehicle serviced regularly. Neglected engines waste at least ten per cent more fuel and catalytic converters only clean emissions when properly maintained.

- Check tyres – under-inflated tyres wear faster, waste fuel, are dangerous and contribute to a growing environmental problem. Check pressures weekly.

- Obey speed limits to save and stay legal. Feather the throttle at cruising speed; 56mph uses 25 per cent less fuel than 70mph and a smoother driving style saves fuel.

- Accelerate briskly without racing the engine – pulling away too fast uses up to 60 per cent more fuel. Intelligent gear changes at modest engine speeds can save up to 15 per cent in fuel.

- Reduce drag – remove roof racks and carriers when not in use and keep windows closed to avoid drag and wasted fuel. Remove unnecessary and heavy boot luggage and

Smarter driving for better saving

SENSIBLE CHOICE: Downsizing to modern cars like the Peugeot 107 city car (right) or affordable Kia Ceed family hatch – with a seven-year warranty – can save money, but sensible driving can knock even more off your motoring bill wide wheels and tyres that add rolling resistance. Air conditioning costs fuel too so try to use the fan and vents unassisted.

- Buy green fuel and use less. Look for low sulphur 'city' diesel or cleaner petrol (low sulphur/aromatics). Consider converting to LPG (liquid petroleum gas) – half the price of petrol and with lower emissions.

- Think ahead – there is no point rushing and then having to brake suddenly.

- Be a tank miser. Why fill the tank to the brim and burn more fuel carrying more weight than necessary?

- Stuck in traffic? Turn off the engine after two minutes to save fuel and emissions.

Scrapheap banger is motoring ahead

AFTER a shaky start, the Government's £2,000-a-go Scrappage incentive is purring like a sports car.

It has been so successful that the £300 million fund set aside by the Treasury could be exhausted before the official cut-off date next March.

So, while there is some talk of a top-up donation, get your order in now if you fancy swapping your banger – firm orders will be honoured even if the delivery of the new car is delayed.

The donor car must have been registered before 31 August 1999 and your name must have been on the V5 'logbook' for 12 months before the date your new car order is placed.

For their part, carmakers have mostly embraced the deal after initial disappointment that they would be expected to contribute half of each '£2,000 Government Scrappage grant' and noting that the Treasury would claw back some of its money through VAT on each car sale.

BY STEVE LOADER

Some brands have even put extra money on the table on top of their £1,000 per unit as well as extra specification and zero per cent finance – though this is no big deal when interest rates are so low.

On the other hand, consumers with savings will know they are receiving precious little return and be tempted to seek a psychological boost from buying a new motor that should be cheaper to fuel and tax.

And don't be despondent if not in a position to take advantage of Scrappage; with the exception of city cars and superminis, you should get a hefty discount on most new cars in the current climate without needing a banger to scrap.

If you have been out of the car market for a while though, do your research. You will have heard that diesel cars now outsell petrol, but that is not the full picture.

They cost more and the extra weight can be wearing and intrusive in the smaller cars most in demand now and you need to cover many miles to recover the extra upfront outlay.

Meanwhile, petrol is making a comeback with lighter, small capacity turbocharged engines able to deliver diesel pulling power and lower emissions.

You might also consider a hybrid, but these cost more and this must also be weighed against the mileage you intend to cover.

Pros and cons of tax savings

WHATEVER you do, don't swap your current car just to save a few pounds on road tax.

plan to downsize or go for a more fuel-efficient model.

Chancellor Alistair Darling has taken the pressure off a bit after an outcry induced by draconian rates due to be applied to larger cars, just as the recession clobbered the economy.

But Labour – and a Conservative government is unlikely to be different due to the world's environmental worries – has said it will continue to drive down vehicle sizes and emissions by using tough VED (Vehicle Excise Duty) rates, based on CO₂ emissions rather than fuel consumption and applying only to cars registered after March 1, 2001.

Inconsistent emissions data on older cars means these are taxed simply at £120/year up to 1,549cc and then £185 if larger – something of a bargain for owners of older 'gas guzzlers' if they can bear higher fuel bills, opt for a £1,500-2,000 LPG (liquid petroleum gas) conversion or cover relatively few miles.

Builder develops young people

HOUSE-builder Persimmon Homes has launched a training scheme for school leavers.

A total of 21 positions – eight on site and 13 in technical departments – are available at the firm for youngsters who have achieved at least five A* to C grades in their GCSE exams, including English and maths.

Chief executive Mike Farley said: “While we are proud of our track record in developing opportunities for a broad cross-section of trainees, we recognise the recent impact of the downturn. Now the market is stabilising, we are eager to rebuild by once again investing in young people for the future.”

Visit www.persimmonhomes.com and click on the recruitment link for more information.

Pupils rewarded for determination

SECONDARY school pupils received a possible taste of things to come when they graduated from the Medway Children's University.

Youngsters representing 17 schools studied for modules in areas such as archaeology, forensic science and drama as part of the Medway Council scheme.

They each received a medal and certificate for their efforts during a ceremony at the University of Kent's Medway campus.

Prof Clare Mackie said: “The children we saw clearly had a great desire and determination to test themselves and see what they could achieve.”

“They have now taken the first step towards the type of fulfilling careers that a university education can deliver.”

Awards ceremony brings skills in line

A LECTURER from Orpington College was one of more than 100 across the country honoured by the Institute for Learning.

The IfL hosted an awards ceremony in Westminster for the first-ever group of teachers to have gained either Qualified Teacher Learning and Skills, or Associate Teacher Learning and Skills status.

Malcolm Harker, head of business studies at Orpington, was one of them.

He said: “I feel it is very important to have established standards for adult teaching practice.”

“Although I feel there are a lot of excellent teaching standards in further education already, this is an important step towards parity with our peers in schools.”

A degree of hope for school leavers

A NEW Kent County Council scheme will present four school-leavers with the opportunity to juggle full-time jobs with university degrees.

The authority has four vacancies on its finance team and will fill them by recruiting 18 and 19-year-olds who have recently completed their A-levels.

Cabinet member for finance Cllr John Simmonds said it was right that KCC should lead the way during the recession.

He said: “In these difficult times it is more important than ever to offer opportunities to young people.”

“These young people from Kent schools are our future and they will have the chance to become a graduate, join a profession and follow a rewarding career.”

A group of 13 youngsters – from which the final four will be selected – have been invited to attend a two-day assessment at the Oakwood House mansion in Maidstone.

They will be interviewed by a panel and asked to complete a number of individual and group challenges, with the best candidates placed on a five-year training programme that will lead to a BSc (Hons) degree in applied accounting.

The degree, which will be provided by the Oxford Brookes University, forms part of the Association of Chartered Certified Accountants (ACCA) qualification.

The successful candidates will also earn membership to the ACCA, which is the fastest growing professional accountancy body in the world.

Lizi Payne, who began work with KCC's finance team as part of the authority's graduate training scheme, will form part of the interview panel during the assessment and will also act as the programme manager.

She said: “I think this is a very exciting opportunity for all these young people.”

“Together with all the other young professionals at KCC, I want to offer them the benefit of my own experience and support them in the challenges they face while working in public finance.”

BMW unleashes all-new 5 series

By STEVE LOADER

IT'S tough at the top.

Germany's prestige triumvirate – Mercedes-Benz, Audi and BMW – are all giving their dealers headaches with ever increasing model line-ups.

That means more showroom space needed, more demonstrator cars and more workshop training, but this does allow a brand to cater for just about every well-heeled customer's tastes.

And that person's latest whim could be a five-door hatchback, the sort of car that sells in droves with a Ford or Vauxhall badge on the bonnet, but not something the German trio has designed to offer before.

Versatility

They are now though: Audi will soon launch a car looking suspiciously like a five-door hatch, but called the A5 SportBack and BMW will do the same with the lavishly labelled 5-Series Gran Turismo.

There is logic to their moves though as new car buyers – even the Americans – start to think about downsizing.

Both cars give buyers of the brands' bigger cars a chance to trade down without loss of style, while hatchback versatility balances the loss of a bigger boot.

The BMW also has the cachet of a back end that can open either as a boot or as a full hatch, though its designers won't like the fact that this feature can be bought for half the price on Skoda's value brand Superb executive flagship that arrived a year earlier.

For the BMW won't be cheap; it is expected to head the all-new 5-Series range and, incidentally, its neat lines suggest that the saloon and estate versions will be more conventionally styled than the current 5-Series... hallelujah!

The GT will be the advance guard, arriving in October and priced at 40-grand plus.

BMW describes it as blending the "luxurious interior of a BMW 7-Series, while at the same time giving the functionality of a BMW 5-Series Touring or X5 (SUV)".

The GT can be specified with limo-style twin rear seats or three across the back, and these can slide to maximise legroom or boot space according to priority.

They also fold, but I can't honestly see many GT owners using this feature to help them cart stuff to the local household recycling site.

Seeking to tick yet one more box with fickle buyers, the seats are also raised slightly higher as if to tempt buyers switching from an SUV/4x4 style car, as well as aiding entry and exit.

Three powertrains will be available at launch: a relatively frugal 2,993cc diesel – the likely bestseller by a mile – a 2,979cc petrol model that is slightly faster, but less economical, and an egomaniac's V8.

BMW is proud to boast that the V8 offers supercar performance, though electronically limited to a 155mph maximum anyway and with consumption that is increasingly hard to justify. One for the Americans?

Porsche tries four-door formula

FROM a brand that once relied on just two models, Porsche has created a stable that will soon expand to five.

The new runner is the dramatically-styled four-door Panamera Gran Turismo, aimed at a growing niche for four-door sports tourers; Maserati already has the Quattroporte, Mercedes-Benz offers the CLS, Jaguar's elegant new XJ almost qualifies as one, and Aston Martin joins the club soon.

The Panamera lines up with the 911 icon, Boxster, Cayman and Cayenne SUV, in the Porsche range on 12 September priced from £72,266 with a choice of 400 or 500bhp 4.8-litre V8 engines and rear or four-wheel drive.

It sounds like a lot of money in current times, but perhaps not for a Porsche that seats four and has all the cachet, heritage and looks of the classic 911.

It will also soon be available with a more socially-acceptable six-cylinder petrol engine and a petrol-electric hybrid powertrain.

Estate founder's classy new heir

WHEN it comes to estates, the Mercedes-Benz E-Class is still the gvnor.

Even when 'load luggers' were regarded as blue collar rather than white, a Merc E pitched you well above the hoi polloi.

No wonder M-B claims the model founded what is now the 'premium lifestyle estate segment' when the first example arrived in 1977.

There was a reliability wobble with the previous generation, but a midlife crisis facelift put matters right and the launch of all-new successor is expected to maintain that form early next year.

It also has class-leading innovations such as driver drowsiness detection and automatic emergency braking when an accident is recognised as imminent.

Self-levelling rear suspension is standard, plus innovative loading and quick fold rear seating.

As with other recent M-B models, economy has been boosted, yet power is up too – most engine options qualify for the brand's BlueEfficiency low emissions label.

Toyota optimises range

TOYOTA'S high power/low consumption 'Optimal Drive' engine range is proving its worth with the addition of two further units to the Avensis family/company car line-up.

Most notable is the 1.6-litre 'Valvematic' petrol unit, which delivers 130bhp and accelerates to 62mph in just over 10 seconds, yet should average well over 40mpg.

This becomes the new entry model for the Avensis saloon and Tourer (estate) range (from £16,485) and availability of its existing 1.8-litre sister is also extended across the line-up.

The new engine's fellow debutante is a 2.2-litre diesel with six-speed automatic transmission as standard – Toyota's first diesel automatic passenger car – which should also average over 40mpg.

Transform your ride.

STEVE LOADERVolvo C30 DRIVE

VOLVO has embarked on a new environmental route with all the thoroughness employed when it tackled safety innovation.

Though it claims to have been environmentally aware since the 1970s, the upmarket Swedish brand is looking at every alternative power source, including electric and hybrid models, but has taken its first step with a new eco-friendly DRIVE sub-brand.

DRIVE also means reviewing and cutting energy used in production and recycling of the cars, as well as their lifetime running costs and emissions.

For UK buyers, it means wind-cheating and modified diesel versions of familiar models that actually look a whole lot better than before, cost little more and feel good to drive – surely, having your cake and eating it?

The best of the bunch is the new C30 DRIVE (from £15,995), making the most of that model's distinctive coupe hatchback styling with trademark all-glass tailgate.

It isn't the most practical hatchback, but surely the most practical genuine coupe on the market and now one of the most energy-efficient and least polluting. You can even have it with Volvo's tasteful 'R-Design' body kit comprising various spoilers, sideskirts and smart alloys.

I found the C30's sportiness barely affected by the DRIVE engine revisions and low-rolling resistance tyres, yet this car has an official combined fuel consumption of 62.8mpg – 72.4 with the 'Full Monty' DRIVE package including Start/Stop to cut and smoothly re-start the engine in stop-go traffic.

Volvo's green light to DRIVE

Emissions are impressively low; the standard DRIVE emits 119g/km of CO2 making it eligible for the lowest payable road tax of £35/year, while the Start/Stop version only just falls short of tax exemption with 104g/km, helped by under body aerodynamics, covered grille and rear spoiler plus diffuser.

GREEN MACHINES: The Volvo C40 (above) coupe, with its distinctive tail, is the best of the Volvo DRIVE range

It also has a 'regenerative charge' feature, using the car's own forward movement rather than engine power to recharge the battery.

The smooth and well-soundproofed 109PS (108bhp) 1.6 diesel engine plus consumption and emissions figures are shared with the bigger S40 saloon and V50 estate DRIVE models – priced from £17,745 and £19,095 respectively – and all sit 10mm lower to further aid aerodynamics and handling.

Perhaps Volvo's greater achievement though is how the DRIVE treatment – minus Start/Stop – has been applied to bigger models: the newly revamped S80 executive saloon (£21,745), the V70 (£22,745) and rugged XC70 (£27,995) estate twins and the XC60 SUV (£26,745).

These XC models have been demoted to front-wheel drive only, but gained astonishing combined consumption figures of nearly 50mpg and emissions of 159g/km of CO2, qualifying them for £150 road tax.

A lengthy test drive in the XC70 – a truly capacious estate car – showed that the five-cylinder 175PS (173bhp) 2.4 diesel has plenty of low-down urge, yet the onboard computer read an mpg in the mid-40s most of the time.

THERE'S is a wind of change blowing at Mitsubishi.

Not only is the Japanese brand conspicuously involved in major environmental projects such as the Dungeness wind farm, but also playing down its image as a producer of big 4x4s and pick-ups.

The mad EVO road-going rally car is still there as a technological tour de force and halo model and you can buy sporty Ralliart versions of mainstream models, but Mitsubishi now wants to shout about its greener cars.

One for the future is its electric version of the clever five-door iCar runabout, while the eco star of the moment is our road test choice, the Colt Cleartec.

I was slightly underwhelmed at the launch earlier this year as the model's centrepiece, the 'Auto Stop & Go' system seemed rather crude compared to rival solutions I had driven.

However, it can save up to 30 per cent of the car's emissions as well as improving economy by stopping and then restarting automatically when the car is stuck in traffic or halted at the lights.

Colt signals Mitsubishi shift to greener ways

The Cleartec is cheap to buy and run too and there is much to be said for an eco-friendly supermini using a lighter petrol engine, rather than a heavy diesel that costs more upfront and needs a dearer fuel, even if it is better on overall mileage.

And I rather like the Colt, especially after a major midlife makeover; the profile is similar but only 35 per cent of parts were carried over for the rework.

It also gained the smart 'Jet Fighter' nose introduced on the latest Mitsubishi Lancer.

As before, you get two body choices: a sporty three-door – that fits the hotter models – and a more upright five-door that is virtually a mini-MPV.

The latter in 94bhp 1.3 CZ2 Cleartec form is our test car and looks great value at an official £10,099 and even better if you push for a deal or qualify for the current £2,000 Scrappage grant.

In addition to purchase savings and those from Auto Stop & Go, you also gain economy and reduced emissions from low-rolling resistance tyres, a higher top gear, improved alternator and lower viscosity oil, among other tweaks.

This adds up to just 119g/km of CO₂ on emissions or the lowest payable road tax band (£35/year) and a potential average mpg in the mid-50s for the Cleartec.

Where some quoted averages are fanciful, I wouldn't argue much with that after racking up several hundred miles with the car and you certainly don't feel compromised by the eco features.

For a start, the stop-and-go system appeared smoother on the test car – perhaps it settles down with a few miles on the clock – and the Cleartec accelerates faster than its conventional sister model, no doubt helped by the narrower and harder tyres, though these still keep the car tidy when pushing hard on a windy road.

Mind you, acting the fool in this eco-friendly car exposes the Colt's slightly jittery ride, but this is a rare complaint. The car is mostly refined and quieter than before, after some intensive sound absorption and isolation work.

The revamped car has lost some versatility – and no doubt helped save Mitsubishi some production costs – with the replacement of the folding/removable rear seats by a conventional fixed/fold flat arrangement, but this delivers more boot space without compromising head and leg room in the lofty cabin.

Sadly, interior design and materials gained little from the revamp; earlier two-tone 'cool' highlights have gone, even if the ample stowage was retained.

EXPANSION: Countrystyle group

Recycling firm gets taken over

WASTE management company, Countrystyle Group has taken over the running of Hythe Plant and Recycling.

The group is at the forefront of environmentally-friendly disposal practices and said it will continue to adopt a 'green' approach and the business will continue to operate from the existing waste transfer and recycling facility, at Park Farm Industrial Estate, Folkestone.

Countrystyle said the acquisition is part of its ongoing development plan.

Business development director Mat Stewart, said: "We're delighted with the acquisition and see this as an important strategic step in expanding the areas that we cover throughout the south east."

"Countrystyle is now closer than ever to achieving its goal of becoming the waste management company of choice in the south east."

The sell-off was conducted by Jenner Group Ltd whose spokesman Simon Pentecost said: "We believe that Countrystyle is well placed and has the resources to take the recycling and collection services offered by Hythe Plant and Recycling to the next level."

"Jenner Group looks forward to continuing to work closely with Countrystyle to achieve the recycling targets required by Jenner's construction customers".

Downturn 'teaching businesses valuable lessons in prudence'

KENT'S professional services sector is faring better than any other during the recession, giving great cause for optimism, according to a new study.

Accountants across the county were asked about the financial pressure upon their clients in different sectors, and professional services like lawyers and architects came out on top.

The study – commissioned by independent lender Venture Finance – showed that in Kent, creative industries came out just behind.

More than 1,000 accountants across the UK were asked to rate the extent to which clients in different sectors were under financial pressure during the recession.

Pressure

In Kent, on a scale of one to five, with one being the most pressurised and five the least, the professional services sector scored an average of 3.05.

Creative industries were just behind with 3.02 while retail was a surprise third with 2.75.

The construction, manufacturing and recruitment sectors all reported higher rates of pressure in the recession.

In addition more than a third of Kent accountants surveyed felt the majority of their current client base could survive for another year – even if the economic climate

RECESSION PREMIER LEAGUE – KENT

| Sector | Recovery Score |
|-------------------------|----------------|
| 1 Professional services | 3.05 |
| 2 Creative industries | 3.02 |
| 3 Retail | 2.75 |
| 4 Construction/property | 2.47 |
| 5 Manufacturing | 2.46 |
| 6 Recruitment | 2.43 |

does not improve in that time.

The recession has encouraged prudent financial management and planning, and the survey revealed more than a third of Kent accountants' clients make financial forecasts on a monthly basis.

Decreases in credit availability from traditional sources have also helped boost awareness of other options amongst businesses.

Nearly two-thirds of Kent accountants saw a jump in the number of their clients proactively seeking to find out more about alternative sources of funding.

Venture said the figures were in keeping with the rise in popularity of alternative funding options like invoice and asset based lending (ABL) – now the second most popular form of funding among clients of Kent-based accountants.

Research showed businesses are also taking more steps to protect themselves, with 65 per cent of accountants reporting a rise in the number of clients seeking services that protect or insure against bad debt.

Ian Burman, regional director of Venture Finance said: "It is important to recognise that although it remains a difficult time for businesses, there are positive signs which should not be ignored."

"There is life after the recession."

"Professional services businesses seem to be in the top recovery position because of the specialist skills and abilities they provide."

Spending

"Perhaps most surprising was retail at third – maybe this is a sign consumers are spending out of the recession? Only time will tell."

He added: "It is also encouraging to see greater prudence being employed in financial practices. It would appear business owners have learned some important lessons during this downturn."

"People are taking more of a back to basics, common-sense approach to funding and that can only be a good thing."

GREAT IDEA: The brush holder

PLENTY of the best business ideas began in spare bedrooms across the world, but Sean Reilly's new project has not travelled very far – it has only reached the bathroom.

The 30-year-old from Chartham, near Canterbury, has taken an idea from the other side of the world and is busy spreading the word to the UK and beyond.

His business partner first encountered The Flipper at an airport in Singapore and after recognising the product's potential, they gained distribution rights for the UK, Ireland and France.

The Flipper is a toothbrush holder which comes in a range of colourful and friendly designs which help prompt youngsters to brush their teeth. It attaches to the wall and keeps brushes protected from germs.

Mr Reilly's firm RJW Marketing was launched from his home but earlier this month moved to the new Connect 10 business development in Ashford.

He first began to market the innovative design – which centres on a patented plastic hinge which flips open and closed – 12 months ago.

A year-on he has enjoyed a huge response, mainly due to the father-of-two's decision to focus on encouraging good oral health in children.

He said: "Flippers mean one less thing for parents to worry about. They will protect from sneezes and from airborne particles which are thrown up when a toilet is flushed without the lid down. The message we want people to know is that they can actively protect your health."

Bacteria

The Flipper team are working on new designs and researching materials with anti-bacterial coating to help make the devices even more hygienic.

Mr Reilly revealed: "We are looking to develop toothbrushes that tie-in with the product. We are also working on ideas which would actually remove the bacteria."

He also said they were looking at branching out into designs to appeal more to young boys, like incorporating football team emblems.

The enterprise has already had to overcome adversity when his entire stock of 16,000 Flippers was stolen from a warehouse in Ashford in May.

Mr Reilly said: "We were lucky we had good insurers. But we were set back by about two months. It takes six weeks to ship them from Malaysia and at least two weeks to get the order packed."

He recently agreed a deal to stock Flippers in branches of Lakeland in Canterbury, Bluewater and Bromley, to add to several more stockists across Kent, but one day hopes of clinching a deal with a high street leader like Boots.

He said: "The big guys, Procter & Gamble, Colgate... they know we're coming for them."

He added: "We are always on the lookout for new stockists and any outside investment."

"Our website sales are doing well. We are selling probably 10 a day through the website, but there are 12 million children in the UK. If we could get even 10 per cent of them that would be fantastic."

Royal honour acknowledges global success

AN enterprising Kent firm has been presented with an award on behalf of the Queen, recognising its global success.

Maidstone-based Kemet International has led the way in lapping and polishing technology – for more than 70 years.

It began by importing woodworking machines to manufacture the Mosquito fighter aircraft, most famously used in World War Two, before expanding to use diamond abrasives.

Micheal Riedl, joint MD of Kemet International, received a Queen's Award for Enterprise from Vice Lord Lieutenant, Viscount De L'Isle, on behalf of Her Majesty.

The firm won the award for international trade, to recognise their achievement in overseas earnings after establishing operations across Europe, Asia, the Far East and Australia.

The annual awards are made by the Queen on her birthday, on the advice of the Prime Minister, who is assisted by an advisory committee including representatives of Government, industry and commerce, and trade unions.

The Queen's Awards for Enterprise are the UK's top corporate awards recognising the achievement of successful businesses with management and employees working as a team.

The presentation was also attended by the Mayor of Maidstone, Cllr Peter Parvin and Mid-Kent and Faversham MP Hugh Robertson.

Get on bus to find out more about your area

TOURISM, leisure and hospitality businesses across Kent are being offered the chance to send members of staff on a trip to learn more about their local surroundings.

The Out and About trip has been organised by Visit Kent at Kent County Council as part of its Celebrating Kent campaign and will focus on those working in Thanet, Sheppey and Shepway.

The trip, which costs just £10 per person, is designed to help staff find out more about local attractions so that they can advise visitors to the area looking for activities to enjoy and places to visit.

The Thanet excursion, on Thursday, September 3, will start with a guided tour of the Powell Cotton Museum at Quex House and then include a visit to the Pinball Parlour, an introduction to the Thanet Coast Project and a tour of Kent's oldest theatre – the Theatre Royal in Margate.

Refreshments during the day out will include lunch at the Harveys Crab and Oyster House, in Ramsgate, and a cream tea at the Walpole Hotel and Museum.

Wildlife

The Shepway excursion on Wednesday, September 9, will feature guided visits to the award-winning Lower Leas Coastal Park, Haguelands Village – including a cooking demonstration using local produce and lunch, and Romney Marsh Visitor Centre as well as a chance to find out more about wildlife at Dungeness.

The Sheppey excursion on Friday, September 11, will start with a guided tour of the Elmley Marshes RSPB reserve followed a visit to St Thomas the Apostle Church, Harty, and an introduction to the way art is being integrated with the environment at Leysdown-on-Sea.

By ALEX HOAD

There will also be a short presentation and discussion about green tourism and environmental and climate change issues on Sheppey. Refreshments during the day will include lunch at the Ferry House Inn and tea at the Shurland Hotel.

Fran Warrington, head of Visit Kent at Kent County Council, said: "People working in busy businesses rarely have the time to find out about all the attractions in their area."

"Yet so often these are just the people visitors turn to for personal recommendations and advice about where to go and what to see. These visits will enable everyone on board the coach to update their knowledge about tourism and tourism attractions in their area."

"They will be sharing their experiences with people working in similar businesses and gaining valuable information to help them deliver even better customer service."

The coach excursions have been arranged and funded by Visit Kent in partnership with Thanet District Council, Discover Folkestone, Hythe and Romney Marsh and Swale Borough Council.

A FARMER's business has been recognised as one of the top 60 new firms in the UK in a nationwide competition.

A Goudhurst man has outperformed thousands of entrepreneurs to reach the semi-finalist phase of the 2009 HSBC Start-Up Stars Awards.

The national contest, now in its ninth year, recognises, supports and celebrates the initiative and dedication shown by new business in the UK.

Alastair Jessel, who started The Taywell Group, is now hoping to scoop the top title and a cheque for £25,000, courtesy of HSBC.

Farmer Mr Jessel was inspired to start his business by turning traditional farming methods on their head.

With most farmers producing only what they wish to sell, without considering the requirements of their customers, Mr Jessel decided to ask the simple question: "What does the consumer really want?"

He realised that with supermarkets holding 80 per cent of the retail market, he needed to sell what the major chains could not, with the bywords being 'local', 'service' and 'quality'.

He succeeded in obtaining planning permission to build his farm shop on the edge of one of his fields, and to set up a cold storage unit. In March he also received permission to build an IVC composting unit based in Derbyshire.

He is about to start construction and hopes to take in food and green waste from local councils and commercial businesses to save this waste from going to landfill.

With the majority of his farm rented out, Mr Jessel devoted a small amount of land to growing specialist fruits for sale in his shop, and used any surplus fruits to make his own ice cream and sorbet.

The shop sets out to offer its customers high quality food combined with expert advice from well-trained staff, and all his stock is either grown on the farm or produced in Kent and Sussex.

His target market is the 20 per cent of customers who do not shop in supermarkets, as well as the local community and food connoisseurs requiring high-quality products.

He claims his main advantage is the freshness of his product. Supermarket fruit is designed to ripen slowly as the usual time-span from picking to shelf is 10 days, but Mr Jessel's fruit is picked fresh from the bush to capture its full flavour, and has a shelf life of about three to four days.

He is also now starting to grow fruits which are normally imported, such as melons, blueberries, watermelons and tamarilloes, which will help to cut carbon emissions and provide local employment.

The Taywell Farm Shop and Taywell Ice Creams are growing at the rate of 25 per cent and 90 per cent per annum and are on target to achieve profits of £100,000 and £50,000 respectively.

And the business is going from strength to strength, with plans to open a new shop in Tunbridge Wells by Christmas, which will bring the Kent countryside to town.

Last year, the farmer's ice cream-making process was filmed by BBC TV for The Apprentice and demand soared by 100 per cent after his appearance on the programme.

Judging

The Taywell Group is one of 60 companies to reach the Start-up Stars semi-finals.

A panel of business experts will select the top 25 start-up companies to go forward to the national judging.

There will also be £10,000 cheques for the best new green business putting the environment at the top of its agenda, the best new business set up by a graduate, and the best new business trading internationally.

Head of business banking for HSBC, Huw Morgan, said: "HSBC Start-Up Stars is about demonstrating by practical example that with the right help and support, there are still opportunities out there for people with the dedication and will to succeed. We hope the success of The Taywell Group in this year's HSBC Start-Up Stars Awards will help it go from strength to strength, as well as proving to other budding entrepreneurs that business dreams really can be turned into reality."

Start-Up Stars supporter Google will be offering £11,000 worth of free services plus mentoring at Google's UK headquarters, to be split between the four winners.

Specialist business partner, Start Your Business, will also be offering a year's free subscription to each of the category winners.

The winner will be revealed on November 23.

A SCHEME has been launched to encourage cooperation between European tourism bodies to help bring in visitors.

The Sustainable Tourism Research Intelligence Partnership (SUSTRIP) project will cost almost £3m and is being backed by Visit Kent, Kent County Council and includes partners from France, Belgium and Holland.

SUSTRIP is intended to help boost the regions' tourism industries and develop their visitor economies by sharing research and building up knowledge of what the tourism market demands.

Participating groups say each of the areas faces similar challenges and issues in developing their tourism industries.

It is the first time Kent has worked with three European partners on one major tourism initiative and the county will receive £396,904 of European investment as a result.

All of the projects undertaken will focus on the four different aspects of the business – visitors to each region, local tourism and leisure businesses, communities and the natural environment.

The industry's impact and its benefits will also be explored, as well as ways of maximising an area's potential.

In Kent, the programme will include the most detailed research ever undertaken into subjects like the economic benefits of visitors, transport, accommodations and attractions. It is hoped the findings will help preparations for an influx of visitors attending the 2012 London Olympics.

European project to develop tourism

JOINT EFFORT: Representatives of all the areas involved in the scheme

Ruth Wood, development manager at Visit Kent, attended the launch event in Sandwich and said: "All the participating regions are very enthusiastic about the big difference this is going to make to their local tourism providers. Following the new research projects – and the development of knowledge platforms, resources and communications channels – we will all have access to highly-detailed information about our visitor markets.

"This will be valuable information we can all use to support our local tourism, leisure and hospitality businesses effectively."

Kent farms could give us the food security we depend on Food security – words currently amongst the most used in the English language.

PAT CRAWFORD, press officer at Hadlow College, investigates the complex issues that are embraced by these simple words

THE term isn't new – in fact, it was used during the Second World War when gallant merchant sailors were endeavouring to bring much-needed food to this country.

Delve a bit deeper and the chances are that it was used in all sorts of siege and blockade situations throughout our history.

The difference now is that the challenges are bigger – and probably the most insuperable – ever faced by mankind.

What do we actually mean when we speak of 'food security'?

In the simplest terms, we mean our ability to provide enough food for the population of the world to survive.

The provision of water – about which we're also facing increasing problems – is also generally included, and the food has to be safe and affordable.

Why has food security become such an issue? After all, for centuries, some parts of the world have suffered shortages that have often deteriorated to famine status.

What is causing scientists to predict a worsening state of affairs that could result in millions of people going hungry in countries that have never hitherto experienced shortages of staple necessities?

There isn't one single reason, but an accumulation of factors.

Firstly, we have a burgeoning global population that is predicted to reach nine billion by 2050. In addition to this, the diets of people living in developing countries are changing, and the staples – rice and maize – are gradually being replaced – or at least supplemented – by the inclusion of far more meat, dairy products and other 'developed world foodstuffs'.

These two factors alone would be worrying – but there is much more.

As well as population growth, we are facing issues related to climate change.

If the worst predictions are borne out in regard to rises in sea levels, we stand to lose huge tracts of valuable farming land all round the globe – including a very considerable acreage here in Kent.

We then have to consider where displaced families and businesses will be relocated – thus potentially using more precious land.

By the same token, although rises in average temperatures can enable us to extend the ranges of crops we produce and lengthen the growing periods, we face threats of increasing numbers of flash floods and high winds, interspersed with periods of drought. Not the most clement weather changes from the perspectives of farmers and growers.

But even this doesn't tell the full story. The carbon emissions produced by the farming industry are considerable – and this may mean that in time there will be need for drastic changes to some practices and methods currently in use.

In relation to reducing emissions, the use of some oil-based fertilisers is now being banned by the EEC – and their loss is predicted to result in a big drop in crop yields.

At the same time, there is increasing urgency attached to finding viable substitutes to energy currently derived from fossil fuels because, carbon emissions aside, reserves are running down.

Putting all these issues into county perspective – could Kent farmers and growers create food security for the county's population?

Probably – because Kent is home to some of the best farmers and growers in the UK. It might mean a change in diets and eating habits, but these are surely small sacrifices if it came down to survival, and some scientists are forecasting it might do just that.

Make sure you click with potential customers online

Don't miss a chance to get your web address out there

Small business expert and online specialist JO DODDS believes only through active promotion of your website can you look to benefit online

FOR many small businesses, the web is often overlooked. Either they haven't invested at all or they prepare a home page and leave it at that.

But properly updated and marketed it can become one of your most essential marketing tools.

So once you've taken the plunge, just how do you get the traffic flowing to spark those all-important sales leads? Crucially, how do you market it offline?

More and more people search online to find local suppliers, but there are still a lot of people who don't who may like to use the internet to research potential suppliers once they are aware of them.

The first, hopefully obvious, place to promote your url is on your paperwork; letterheads; compliment slips; business cards; leaflets; faxes and brochures.

But the one place that you may not have thought about is to promote it on your product packaging. You can also print it on your envelopes, particularly if your business has an intriguing name.

Word of mouth is also very useful for many aspects of promoting a business. If you can get other people talking about you, preferably in glowing terms, that can be a great opportunity for your business, as is networking and other face-to-face interaction.

If you throw in the concept of your website and make it memorable, that can really help to get the message out.

Some of you will be aware of Paul Brannigan. He is a local accountant/tax specialist who is also accomplished in public speaking and presentation. When he wanted to promote his business and website he developed a memorable way of telling everyone his company name and website address in one go.

He became known as "the proactive accountant"... pause for effect... "dot.com", which also ended up with people who knew of Paul already, joining in the dot com bit at the end, to emphasise the point!

It's likely that most people who heard his introduction will have remembered his website address, as planned.

Another place to put your url is on giveaways like mouse mats, note pads, T-shirts, cups, keyrings; basically products that will continue in use for some time, ensuring that your prospects keep seeing your website address over time. In nearly all of these cases, having a memorable web address that explains something about your business is preferable, particularly so that prospects feel the need to have a look at it.

Discounts

Make sure all your staff know what your url is; they may sometimes be asked for it and you should encourage them to recommend that prospects visit your website.

And when you take out local newspaper advertising, ensure your web address is prominently featured. It's a great way of hitting a wide audience. You can tempt them further by suggesting they can take advantage of discounts by visiting your site.

What do you put at the bottom of your emails? I have my name, company name, telephone number and web address, and a line explaining why people should visit my website.

I have emailed contacts following meeting them at networking events just to connect with them, ie. not selling to them or suggesting they visit our website, and seen them sign up for my newsletter because they have clicked through on the url on my email signature. What could you say about your business on your email signature?

Don't forget to put it on your invoices and receipts to introduce and remind customers that they can find out more information online.

If you have premises open to the public then you can put your url on your closed sign and/or on your window to remind people that they can find out more information and maybe even shop online and/or book appointments any time of the day. Make sure that you put up signage inside, too.

If you have corporate clothing for yourself and your workforce, then make sure your url is on that. If you sponsor an event of any kind or participate in a fund-raising event you can promote your url somewhere: on your sponsor form, on a T-shirt, or in a press release with more information.

Lastly, if you have a domain name please, please make sure that you set your email address up properly to look something like me@yourcompanyname.com so that you look professional and people know where to find your site.

I still see business people using Hotmail and Yahoo accounts for their email, which is bad enough, given how cheap it is to buy personalised web domains.

When I see businesses with a website active on their url but still using a Hotmail account it makes me cringe. If you have hosting for a website, then you will usually have free email at that url too with the potential to upgrade to a larger inbox for an extra cost.

Here endeth the lesson...

TWO Kent food producers helped to ensure that the opening of a new foodhall at Bluewater was voted a huge success.

Cheesemakers of Canterbury were well-prepared for the opening of the John Lewis Foodhall from Waitrose at the shopping centre last week, but an incredible response from customers meant the entire stock of their renowned Ashmore Kentish Cheese had sold out within an hour and more stocks had to be rushed in.

Simply Icecream, based in Bonnington, near Ashford, were also providing tasters to customers who had queued in their hundreds waiting for the doors to open on Thursday, August 6.

Simon Russell, managing director of John Lewis Bluewater, said: "Kent has some tremendous local produce and suppliers – we were particularly impressed with Simply Icecream and the Cheesemakers of Canterbury."

"We're delighted to give shoppers the chance to celebrate the delicious flavours from our area."

He added: "I was lucky enough to be here on the day we opened in 1999, and I have to say, when the foodhall opened it seemed to me to be busier than it was on that very first day. It was incredible. I have never seen anything like it. The queue snaked all the way down to the basement. There were hundreds of people waiting for us to open."

Unbelievable

"We knew there was going to be interest in advance – there have been people peering over the balustrade to see what's going on for weeks. But the response was absolutely unbelievable. Within five minutes you couldn't get into the cheese room for all the people in there."

He revealed the choice to stock the two local companies had not been a difficult one.

He said: "We had a dedicated foodhall purchaser who approached the producers. There are so many high-quality producers in Kent but we thought these two were fantastic, a little bit different, and we thought they would fit right in."

"We are very, very keen to use in-season and local produce. We will continue to look out for other producers if we ever increase the number of lines we run."

CAPTION: Simon Russell of John Lewis Bluewater and ice cream supplier Sally Newall

"The flavours of the ice cream are so unusual and the smell in the cheeseroom is just incredible. I love it. I want to buy something every time I set foot inside."

Simply Icecream, which produces luxury hand-made flavours, has gone from strength to strength since it was launched by Sally Newall three years ago.

The firm uses cream from the South East Dairy Farmers, and all seasonal fruit is sourced from local producers.

Mrs Newall told us: "We first went into Waitrose stores at the end of April. It was the end of a long process. We are stocked in 13 stores across Kent and Sussex."

"If sales are good then hopefully they might want to take it further and sell us nationally. We have a lot of interest from places in the north who would like to stock our ice creams and we would like to get it up there, but the problem until now has been the distribution."

"When we were asked if we'd like to go into John Lewis on Oxford Street and Bluewater, obviously we said 'yes please'."

It is a stark rise for an enterprise which started with a six-month trial run at Potten Farm farm shop in Sellindge, near Ashford.

After a successful trial the range had gone into five farm shops by 2006 and is now in more than 100.

Despite the huge jump in demand, the production is still carried out by Sally and one other member of staff.

She said: "We are working harder, but we are still working within our capacity. We produce between 1,000 and 1,500 litres a week, we do it all ourselves, there is no batch processing."

"If there was a time when we needed to double the amount we are producing then I would just take on two more staff – we won't change the way we produce our range. We make everything from scratch."

Turnover

Sally also said she hoped the firm could continue to operate from its base in Bonnington, near Ashford, despite the firm's inevitable growth. She said: "I want to stay where we are for as long as possible."

She revealed: "We have been doubling turnover year-on-year. Hopefully within a couple of years we want to be looking at a turnover of £500,000 – it might take three or four years though."

The Cheesemakers of Canterbury hand-make the Ashmore Kentish Cheese at Lamberhurst Farm, in Dargate, using unpasteurised British Friesian cow's milk from a local farm, using a recipe which has been perfected over the last 25 years.

Expert secures regular TV spot after advice campaign

A FINANCIAL expert has landed a TV slot after his campaign to get more people to seek independent advice proved a winner.

After his first slot on CNBC's Strictly Money in April, when he spoke about the budget, David Brunning has been invited back to speak about funding children's private education and pensions.

Mr Brunning, from Tunbridge Wells, has accused Prime Minister Gordon Brown of using the nation's pensions as a "piggy bank" and claims the whole pensions arena is chaos.

He said: "Doing my first television interview live to 12 million people on CNBC was very much being thrown into the deep end, but it went well and I was delighted to be asked back."

"I'm on a constant campaign to get people to seek professional, independent advice and the recent appearances on TV and in the national press will help people get this message."

And, if it's in clients' interests, I'm not afraid to be outspoken on issues, even if I risk upsetting the Government or the banks."

Mr Brunning, of financial advisers Brunning Newman Houghton, added that he's keen to spread the message about the new options available to help people make the most of their money and has also voiced his concerns about high street banks' poor record on selling financial products to customers.

He is also a regular newspaper and magazine columnist who specialises in pensions, employee benefits, investment and inheritance tax planning. He holds the Personal Finance Society's AFPC qualification and is an occupational pension transfer specialist.

Mr Brunning will be appearing on CNBC's Strictly Money again on August 27. You can watch his previous appearances by going to www.cnbc.com and searching for 'Brunning'.

Kent on Sunday sport takes a look back at the county's sporting action of yesteryear

100 YEARS AGO: THE astronomical rise of Douglas Carr continued, with his 'googler' proving the talk of the Canterbury festival, with batsmen and spectators alike trying to get their heads around the concept of a ball that looked like an off-break but instead turned violently to the off side.

Kent's Cranbrook-born spinner (DW as he was known in the era of gentleman and players) had been a moderate club cricketer until he began learning the technique in 1908.

The former Sutton Valence schoolboy made his first-class debut earlier in the season at the age of 37. He was instrumental in a 10-wicket win over Hampshire that concluded a festival week attended by 25,976 fans.

He became so adept at the new art that he was drafted into the England squad for the final Ashes Test and took 7 for 282 – 12 months later he would named one of Wisden's cricketers of the year.

50 YEARS AGO: THE build-up to the new football season continued with a burst of activity in the transfer market. The most interesting move, in hindsight, was the arrival in the county of inside forward Hughie Stinson.

Stinson joined Gillingham from Accrington Stanley, but made just one appearance for the club, before embarking on an eventful career in the non-league game that continued into this millennium.

He was Faversham Town manager when the chairman decided to change the entire team just minutes before kick-off, sparking a player revolt. He later succeeded Alan Walker as Sittingbourne boss in 1999/2000.

Stinson was unpaid, as were most of his players, but he helped the club avoid relegation before stepping down the following season.

Elsewhere Dover signed 17-year-old Derek Robson from Arsenal and Maidstone prepared for their first season in the Isthmian League by capturing Brian Myers from Crystal Palace.

25 YEARS AGO: MARK Benson, battling through the pain of a persistent knee injury, chose the ideal moment to make his first ever one-day century, a Benson & Hedges Cup semi-final with Warwickshire, who had posted 224 thanks largely to double West Indian World Cup winner Alvin Kalicharan.

Benson batted through the innings and an unbroke stand of 90 with Richard Ellison took Kent through to the final with Middlesex.

Another West Indian legend, Viv Richards, kept wicket as the West Indian tourists took on a Bob Woolmer XI at the Garrison Ground, but the event proved disastrous for the host club Gillingham, who lost an estimated £5,000, when a crowd of 8,000 was predicted and only 1,800 fans turned up.

COSTLY: Only 1,800 turned up to watch legendary Viv Richards and the Windies

Sappers engineered stunning cup record

Chatham club's FA Cup run one the Gills could only dream of Going over old ground

By FRED ATKINS

USE the word 'cognoscenti' in certain pubs in the Medway area and you're likely to get the local equivalent of a Glasgow kiss – a Chatham cuddle perhaps.

Similarly, if you claimed the area was the home of an FA Cup-winning football team, you might be greeted with disbelief or worse, though the cognoscenti know otherwise.

Kent's record in the FA Cup reflects the fact that the county has only had one Football League club for the majority of its history.

Gillingham's run to the quarter-finals in 2000 is the high watermark in a modern era otherwise only remarkable for the odd giantkilling run by the county's non-league sides.

Keener scholars of the game know, however, that in the first year the cup was held, a team from Battersea called Wanderers beat Royal Engineers 1-0 in the first ever final in 1872.

The Engineers, famed for a revolutionary style that involved passing the ball to team mates instead of just dribbling towards the opposition goal, played the Great Lines in Chatham, the vast sprawling open space to the south of the town centre today dominated by the War Memorial.

In terms of silverware, the Sappers' achievements in the FA Cup alone are unlikely ever to be equalled by a Kent club.

Aside from finishing as runners-up in 1872, they reached the final on three further occasions, winning in 1875, when they beat Old Etonians 2-0 in a replay at the Oval thanks to goals from Henry Renny-Tailyour and William Stafford, after the initial game was drawn 1-1.

Their fame was fleeting and by 1882/83 they'd merged with Rochester Invicta to form Chatham United.

In 1889 they beat Nottingham Forest to reach the last eight, but were thumped 10-1 at the Lines by West Bromwich.

Army rules prevented Chatham from charging an admission fee and as a direct result the FA introduced a rule saying all future games would have to be played at enclosed grounds to ensure the visitors received a share of the gate money.

Chatham duly moved to Alderman Winch's' ground, the Maidstone Road ground they have used ever since.

For a while Chatham remained the top team in the area. In 1892 they entered a poll designed to whittle 26 clubs down to 12 and form a new Southern League. Chatham received 26 votes and came top, while Tottenham were rock-bottom with one vote (presumably their own).

Yet it took another two years for the league to finally form and though Chatham were founder members, by 1900 "financial difficulties" had kicked in and they were eclipsed by New Brompton FC, the team from Priestfield Road, who had formed a just a hoof away from the Lines at the Napier Arms.

Today the sporting tradition on the Lines continues, with Medway Rugby club based on what was the northern end of the site and the Garrison Ground to the east, on the Brompton side.

Smalling buoyed by U21 outing

AFTER making his England under -21 debut this week, Chris Smalling is hoping more appearances at Fulham will enhance his chance of becoming a permanent fixture in the national side.

The 19-year-old former Maidstone United defender was a surprise addition to Stuart Pearce's England under-21s and featured for half an hour in the 0-0 draw against Holland on Tuesday.

Smalling, who joined Fulham from Maidstone United last summer, has rapidly risen up the football ranks.

In his first season in professional football with Premier League side Fulham, the former Chatham Grammar schoolboy captained the reserves and made his debut for the first-team in the final game of last season against Everton.

Although delighted by his outing with England, Smalling believes he will have a tough battle to cement his place at international level.

He said: "The only way I will be able to keep my place with England is by playing regularly with Fulham. Now the club is in Europe there could be a chance for me to play more games, which would be great."

"All I have got to do is get my head down and keep working hard and hope I will get more chances to play in the first-team. It has been an incredible couple of years for me and I hope I can keep improving the way I have been."

Smalling will be hoping to feature for England next month when they begin their Euro 2011 qualifiers with trips to Macedonia and Greece.

Karen life and Sol of the party again

Missing Solheim Cup team a blessing in disguise as golfer claims first win since 2004 British Open title KAREN Stupples believes the disappointment of missing out on Solheim Cup selection played a role in ending her five-year trophy drought last weekend.

The 36-year-old put a frustrating season behind her by finishing one shot clear of the field a week ago to lift the Wales Ladies Championship of Europe. Her third career title, it was the first since victory in the 2004 British Open.

The golfer, who grew up in Deal but has spent the vast majority of her professional career in the United States, went into the event at Royal St David's at a low ebb. Her season, heavily disrupted by appendix surgery and ongoing problems with veins in her legs, had gotten worse the previous weekend when she was left out of Alison Nicholas'

European team for women's golf's equivalent of the Ryder Cup.

It came as a huge blow to Stupples, who had built her season around peaking for the event, which starts in Sugar Grove, Illinois tomorrow.

She told Kent on Sunday: "With everything going on with the Solheim Cup and not being picked I think it probably made me even more determined to win in Wales."

"I think I was very close to making the team, I never really asked [Nicholas] when she told me I wasn't going to be picked, there wasn't much else to talk about."

"I would say I can understand her picks. I would also say I could argue against them as well. My other Solheim Cup was not that successful, but I have done okay in the Lexus Cup and I have played more matchplay than others in the team."

Stupples' victory in Wales may have come too late to claim a second Solheim Cup appearance, but it is a significant boon to her career. With a five-year gap since the last victory on tour, there had been moments where she questioned whether the opportunities to win had passed.

She said: "You always wonder where that next win is coming from, but I never doubted I had the ability to do it. I had a couple of chances last year and I knew my game was there."

"This is perfect timing, it makes this whole year worthwhile and makes up for it. I'm looking forward the rest of the season and now I've won again I feel much more comfortable with the golf I'm playing."

Youngsters' Royal appointment

KENT'S Royal St George's golf course played host to the British Boys Amateur Championships this week which saw the county's best young golfers take on rising stars from Europe.

Nine golfers from across the county entered the prestigious tournament, but they all fell by the way side after the third round on Wednesday.

A total of 256 promising young golfers entered the event in a bid to lift the prestigious title, which has been in the hands of European Tour star Sergio Garcia.

One familiar face in the field was 2009 Open Championship Silver medal winner Matteo Manassero.

Chislehurst's Michael Hamilton was Kent's star performer and made it through to the third round only to lose out to Spain's Jon Rahm Rodriguez on the 21st hole.

Daniel Byrne (Dartford), Jack Colegate (Rochester & Cobham Park), Jack McKenzie (Princes), Connor Fletcher (Chart Hills) and

Liam Harper (Lydd) all exited the competition in the first matchplay round.

While Canterbury's Levi Johnson, Jordan Godwin (London Golf Club) and Joseph Harper (Cobtree Manor) all fell just short in the second round. Harper, from Maidstone, was involved in the longest game, which ended in defeat to Samuel Echikson from Belgium on the 25th hole.

He said: "It is a great competition and I thoroughly enjoyed it. It was a bit hard to take losing on the 25th hole. I hope I can build on my performance for next year's tournament."

Manassero will have to wait another year for a chance to lift the title after being knocked out in the third round by Andrea Gurini on Thursday. Harper was lucky enough to putt with the Italian and believes he will go a long way.

He said: "He is a top player and looks very professional in the way he plays the game. I am sure he is destined for great things, but I hope I can beat him one day."

Why Gills boss Stimson has an eye for a striker

By DAVID PRITCHARD

AFTER spending his entire playing career as a defender, perhaps it comes as a bit of a surprise that Mark Stimson has a track record of developing young striking talent.

While Simeon Jackson at Gillingham is the latest in a production line of forwards that have benefited from the manager's input and style of play, the Canada international follows the likes of Aaron McLean, Freddy Eastwood, Gary Hooper and Michael Kightly who went on to score 212 league goals under Stimson at Grays.

McLean, Eastwood and Hooper's rise will see them play in the Championship this season, while Kightly is in the Premier League with Wolves.

"I get a big satisfaction out of helping young players," Stimson told Kent on Sunday. "I get a buzz helping these kids get their career back on the right road and be successful."

The Gills boss spent £150,000 on bringing Jackson to Priestfield last year from Conference side Rushden & Diamonds, raising a few eyebrows in the process, especially after mediocre displays during Gillingham's relegation from League One.

Now, after netting 21 goals in League Two last season and scoring a hat-trick on the opening game against Swindon Town last weekend, Stimson believes his star striker compares favourably to any he has worked with in the past.

He said: "Jacko is like McLean in his desire to play at a higher level. His training is everything, they want to do more and obviously the boy McLean is getting his rewards and banging in goals for Peterborough. Freddy Eastwood was technically way above anyone I have coached, he's Premier League standard, but he wasn't as driven as Jacko, McLean or Kightly."

"Those lads listened and took on board what I was trying to tell them. I'm sure Jacko will one day play at a level like that."

The prospect of Jackson playing at a higher level may come sooner than Stimson hoped.

The 22-year-old has started the season on fire, prompting a host of scouts including Tottenham, Reading and Sheffield United to watch the striker in action against Plymouth on Tuesday night – a game he also scored in.

Stimson is optimistic of retaining him until at least January, but is realistic enough to admit a sizeable offer would be difficult to turn down.

"I hope and pray we do keep him," he said. "If you are to lose someone like that there are one or two targets out there I have my eye on just in case, but fingers crossed we don't need it. It would be a massive blow but unfortunately it's going to happen to possibly two or three teams in this window, we just hope it's not us."

County's managers winning the sack race

By FRED ATKINS

IF YOU land a job as the manager of a Kent football club this season and are still in the post by the time the London Olympics come round, you'll have done well.

Of 16 clubs in Kent from Ryman League level and above, just two managers have been in place for longer than a decade and only four have lasted five years.

The average tenure is three years, yet this is far longer than a manager can expect at a professional club, particularly in English football's second tier, where the going rate is 15 months.

Knowing when to change managers is an inexact science, a gamble that a replacement will do sufficiently better than the incumbent to mount a promotion challenge or, more commonly, avoid relegation.

It's arguable that Tottenham and Blackburn avoided relegation last season because they acted at the right moment, but locally, clubs are far less willing to wield the axe and the word 'sack' is rarely used.

Even when a team is relegated chairmen are reluctant to hand out P45s, with the shrewdest recognising the limitations imposed on a manager and judging him accordingly.

Last year Ramsgate were relegated from the Ryman Premier Division and even though the previous four seasons had brought unprecedented success, chairman Richard Lawson came under pressure to sack Jim Ward.

"I won't lie to you, we had a lot of calls to replace Jim from supporters, but the fans don't always see what's going on behind the scenes and all the work he does," Lawson told Kent on Sunday. "The chemistry with Jim and the football club works, so why would we change that after one bad season?"

"We've always been a club that chooses its people wisely. Stability is the thing and when you've got a manager with a proven track record, players obviously want to play for him."

Folkestone took a similar view when they were relegated the previous season under Neil Cugley, the longest serving manager in Kent (outlasted only by Ferguson and Wenger in the top flight).

Having rejected job offers when things were going well, Cugley's loyalty was reciprocated by the board.

"When I first came here we pushed and pushed and got to the top of the Southern League Premier Division, which at the time was just one step from the Conference, but there's only so far you can go with the resources we have," he said.

"It's always difficult for us tucked away where we are to get the quality of players in, especially in the higher leagues."

"I'm a local person so I've always stayed loyal. I've been offered other jobs, but it's a catch-22 situation. You're always offered them when you're doing well. When you're having a bad time the offers don't come in."

Ramsgate and Folkestone will be hoping to reap the same rewards as Gillingham, who haven't officially sacked a manager since they fired Tony Pulis in 1999, though 'mutual consent' has done for one or two.

The Gills chose to stick with Mark Stimson despite relegation from League One in 2007/2008 and were vindicated when he steered them to promotion 12 months later.

In Kent a vacancy is as likely to be the result of a resignation than a trigger-happy chairman as managers don't stand to lose huge pay-outs if they walk out on a club.

Sittingbourne were presented with a fait accompli when Steve Lovell left for Ashford in 2007 and Laim Daish seems more likely to sack Ebbsfleet than the other way around – which would at least put him out of the misery he appears to be in every time he goes near a microphone.

Even if the hot seats are only lukewarm, however, nobody should assume they are indispensable. As Lawson points out, "there's always someone else who can do the job, in any walk of life."

England call is joy for Natalie

NATALIE Seymour's international stock continues to rise after being included in England's squad for the EuroHockey Nations Championships.

The 22-year-old, who plays club hockey for Canterbury ladies, is in the 18-strong selection for the tournament in the Netherlands later this month.

It will be Seymour's second major international tournament this summer, after the defender featured in the Champions Trophy last month.

She told Kent on Sunday: "I'm really chuffed, it's something I've been working towards all summer so it's exciting to be involved."

"I would say it's the highlight of my career so far, I really wanted to start getting selected for major tournaments regularly."

England's women won bronze at the last EuroHockey event, held in Manchester two years ago. As well as a tournament in its own right, the top four sides will secure automatic qualification to the World Cup in Argentina next summer.

England have a good chance of progressing from a group which features Russia, Azerbaijan and the Netherlands, who are the reigning World and Olympic champions.

Seymour believes England have a good chance of reaching at least the semi-finals in Amsterdam.

She said: "That's the real goal for us heading into the tournament. Russia and Azerbaijan are somewhat unknown and although we are higher than them in the rankings, anything can happen. We don't want to get complacent and we know we'll have to earn the right to play."

England begin against Russia next Saturday.

Camier revved up to take on World

British Superbikes leader sets sights on international series

By TOM HOWARD

LEON Camier is hoping offers to join the World Superbike Championship next year will come flooding in after rewriting the record books at Brands Hatch last weekend.

The Ashford superbike rider continued his domination of the 2009 British Superbike Championship last weekend by recording the series' first ever triple race win at Kent's Brands Hatch.

By winning the three races, the 23-year-old became the most successful rider in a single season in the championship's history. His 14 race wins so far eclipsed the 13 held by three-time British champion Niall McKenzie.

His success this season is bound to attract attention from teams in the World Superbike Championship for next season, which Camier would gladly welcome.

He has already experienced the world series after being invited to race as a wild card entry at Donington Park in June, where he finished sixth after starting from 16th position.

He told Kent on Sunday: "I hope teams were taking note of it as I would love to be racing in the World Superbike Championship next season."

"Looking back, it was an unbelievable weekend. To do the triple at my home track and get the team's 100th victory was a dream come true.

"I had a lot of support there and the crowd were amazing. To pick up the record was also a very special moment. I would have laughed off achieving the milestone at the start of the season when we struggled to get the bike ready in time for the first race."

Camier, who started his career grasstrack racing in Kent, admitted coming back from eighth place to win the third race and complete the treble was one of the finest rides of his career.

"The last race is one that will live with me for a long time," he said. "I had a really poor start, but after that I just passed people anywhere on the track. Everything I tried worked out, but I did think at one point I wasn't going to do it."

"I think the secret to my success was to keep a chilled mindset and not worry about winning the championship. I spent some of the weekend playing golf at the London Club and I think it helped me relax ahead of the races. Now I have just got to keep my head down and make sure I can win the title."

With a 113.5-point lead, Camier still has work to do to win the crown with nine races of the season remaining. He returns to action at Lincolnshire's Cadwell Park on August 31.

GLORY DAYS: Georgina Harland won the modern pentathlon bronze at Athens in 2004

Pangs of regret for retired pentathlete

GEORGINA Harland admits she will probably feel as if she is missing out this weekend as she watches the Modern Pentathlon World Championships at Crystal Palace.

The 31-year-old, who won Olympic bronze in the multi-event sport in 2004, was forced to retire last year after injuries saw her miss out on selection for the Beijing Games.

Harland, who grew up in Canterbury, has since taken up a role as Chair of the Athletes Committee at the sport's governing body, the UIPM, and insists she has rarely looked back.

"It's a different life now but it was definitely my time to retire," she said.

"There have been moments where I think it would be nice to be competing again and then about 10 seconds later I think about all the training it takes and I reconsider. I think this week will probably be the strangest because I loved competing on home soil."

Britain has not hosted the World Championships since 2001 and it is the first time the event has been held in London.

Next year the sport's elite come to Kent as Medway Park hosts the British leg of the World Cup as the region steps up its preparations ahead of the 2012 Olympics.

Harland hopes it bodes well for the sport's profile.

She said: "A number of the tickets have sold out for this week which is good. In terms of a legacy and increased media coverage, only time will tell. Hopefully there will be interest in it and people will realise it's a sport we are successful in as a country."

KEY-DAY FOR ASHES PLACE

Captain awaits selectors' decision

By GLENN PEARSON

KENT captain Rob Key finds out today if he is the man the England selectors turn to in a bid to win the final Test at the Brit Oval and with it the coveted Ashes.

The Kent batsman has been tipped to make a comeback after four years out of international cricket, and he did his chances no harm with a knock of 90 in the County Championship game against Northamptonshire in the week.

After England were thrashed by an innings at Headingley in the fourth Test, heads look set to roll with Ravi Bopara, Ian Bell and Alastair Cook all under threat of the chop. Essex batsman Bopara has struggled throughout the series and is expected to either vacate his position at number three in the order or be omitted from the side altogether.

Experienced

Warwickshire's Jonathan Trott was named in the squad but didn't play in Yorkshire and while he appears to be the next man in line, many believe the experienced Key would be better for a one-off Test.

It would represent a fantastic opportunity for the 30-year-old, who has returned to form with scores of 110 against Derbyshire, a career-best of 270 against Glamorgan and 123 against Surrey at the Oval.

Selection in the final Test and an opportunity to help England win the Ashes could reignite his international career, starting with the winter tour to South Africa.

His coach at Kent, Simon Willis, believes the county skipper is the right man for such an important game.

"He is a better player than when he last played for England, that's for sure," he told Kent on Sunday. "The captaincy at Kent has helped him as well and I have no doubt he would do well if called upon. If he does get a chance I can see him going on to have a five or six year career with England."

Some former England players and pundits have called for Mark Ramprakash to make a shock comeback, albeit most of them with Surrey connections, but even he has been quoted as backing Key for the spot.

While it would be Key's first Test since appearing for England in the 2004-2005 series in South Africa, former Kent skipper Dave Fulton – who played with Key at Canterbury – believes he has the ideal temperament to go head on with the Australians.

"I think for me there are two things to weigh up," he said. "Has he got the character to deal with the pressure of a one-off Test? I would give him a huge tick in that box. Has he been harshly dealt with by the England selectors? Definitely.

"He has unfinished business after being dropped having scored a double hundred and 93 against the West Indies. It would be great if he could right those wrongs and I think he is the man to come in for this game."

Key, who was born in Dulwich, has been typically philosophical about an England recall despite the likes of Shane Warne, Nasser Hussain and Graham Thorpe putting forward a case for his inclusion.

He said: "What the selectors think and what the media thinks isn't always the same. They have a good idea of what way they want to go.

"I've been close for a number of years, but my form at the start of the year wasn't good enough, but hopefully recently I've given them something to think about."

Gills skipper relishes Rovers tie

Picture: ADY KERRY

TOP DRAW: Barry Fuller can't wait to take on Blackburn

GILLINGHAM will have the chance to take a Premier League scalp later this month after being paired with Blackburn Rovers in the Carling Cup second round.

A home game against Sam Allardyce's side was the Gills' reward for a 2-1 win against Championship side Plymouth Argyle at Priestfield on Tuesday night.

Although Gills boss Mark Stimson was hoping for a dream tie against his boyhood team Tottenham Hotspur, he is relishing the chance to take on the 2002 cup winners.

"It's a fantastic draw," he said. "I said before it was made, any big club would be great for our finances and Blackburn Rovers fit that. It wasn't long ago I was at the Millennium Stadium watching them win the trophy.

"It's a great game for us. It's one where we're not expected to win, and if we perform well we might surprise them. The boys will certainly look forward to it."

It will be the second time this year the Gills have faced top-flight opposition.

In January more than 10,000 fans crammed into Priestfield to watch the home side almost take Aston Villa to a replay in an FA Cup third round tie.

Gills skipper Barry Fuller missed the Villa game through suspension and is hoping to make up for lost time.

He said: "Fingers crossed I'll be involved this time. The pressure will be on them, we'll just go out and express ourselves and then who knows what could happen?"
